

In 'Q' Card Case

Court Verdict Reached

After deliberating for about 45 minutes, Student Court delivered a verdict of "not guilty" in the "Q" card misuse trial Wednesday.

The Student Court handed down the 4 to 3 decision on the grounds that the prosecution failed to show any malicious intent on the part of the defendant.

The case which had continued over the past three court sessions, arose out of an alleged violation of Student Code section I.B.2.e. It covers the "malicious destruction, damage, or misuse of University property, including library materials, or of private property on the campus."

A former sophomore was accused of illegally using a "Q" number to make long distance phone calls amounting to $350. University "Q" numbers serve as credit cards for business calls.

A telephone company representative testified on Nov. 6 that after investigation of the phone bill, the company traced the discrepancy to the defendant.

The alleged violation occurred during the summer term. The defendant has since dropped out of school to make restitution to the phone company, the defense counsel said.

The defense contended that the accused did not knowingly misuse the "Q" number. Student Court upheld the contention that the defendant showed no malicious intent. They also recommended that the Student Conduct Committee make a provision to qualify malicious intent in code section I.B.2.e.

In the second case reviewed by the court, a freshman was accused of theft from the Co-op Bookstore. The defendant pleaded guilty.

The court placed him on disciplinary probation until the end of spring term.

The third case, an appeal, was dismissed on the motion of the prosecutor. He said that the defendants were denied due process.

The defendants were found guilty in minor court of throwing firecrackers out of a window, a violation of section III.A.2.k.

New EMU Manager Finds Job a Change

After serving in the navy for 28 years, his first civilian job is quite a change, according to L. H. Madden, new night manager of the EMU, since Friday.

Madden's EMU authority is superceded only by Dick Reynolds, EMU director.

Madden's last job was as naval recruiting director in Eugene.

Having been on the job for such a short time, Madden said he still hasn't had time to get the real feel of the job, but did explain some of his duties.

His general duties consist of collecting money from the cash registers at the end of the day, closing at night, and general supervision during the evening. As night manager, the retired commander explained that he would be trying to see that the policies of the EMU, the laws of the state of Oregon and the University policies were carried out.

Madden was very definite in stating there was no connection between the bombing of the Naval Recruiting Center and the recent bombing of the ROTC building here on the University.

Madden said he foresaw no special problems in the future, but added: "As long as people are people, problems will come up."

"I am not the top decision maker," he went on, "but if someone drives a horse into the Fishbowl some evening I'll probably have to make some decision on what to do about it."

Madden graduated from a teacher's college in South Dakota. He then joined the navy and went into flight training. He was a flight instructor until the outbreak of World War II. During the war Madden flew dive bombers from aircraft carriers and afterwards participated in the Berlin airlift, living for two years in Germany. After various assignments in the States, he was stationed in Eugene, where he has lived for the last three years. He is married and has three children, including a daughter at the University.
