Students to discuss national, local issues

Civil disobedience, U.S. foreign policy and the role of students on campus are the three topics which will be discussed this year by the University Symposium Program.

All interested students should attend a meeting at 7:30 tonight in 205 Villard Hall.

The program, which is in its 37th year, is conducted from March 15 to May 15. During that time, students will visit approximately 50 Oregon communities addressing service clubs, civic organizations and high schools.

"The program offers training in public communication in addition to serving as a public relations medium for high schools and service clubs," Scott Nobles, professor of speech, and director of the program, said.

Nobles explained that in the past the topics have dealt with fewer campus issues but, "since there is so much widespread attention of colleges and universities today, we decided to use them as a basis for two of the three topics."

The questions for the program are: 1) What should be the role of students in the decision-making processes at state colleges and universities? 2) What further restrictions, if any, should be placed upon presidential control of U.S. foreign policy? 3) Under what conditions, if any, can civil disobedience be justified in the U.S. today?

Guggenheim poet to read today

Poet Robert Sward will read his own works at 8 tonight in the EMU.

Sward is a native of Chicago. His works include "advertisements," "Uncle Dog and Other Poems" and "Kissing the Dancer and Other Poems."

He has been a poetry fellow at the Bread Loaf Writer's Conference, has studied in England on a Fulbright scholarship and has lived in Mexico, Wales, France and Greece. Sward was a Guggenheim Fellow in poetry in 1964-65, and a D. H. Lawrence Fellow in 1965-66.

His poems have appeared in several periodicals. Sward has taught at State University of Iowa, Connecticut College and Cornell University.

The program is one of a series sponsored by the English Department and Northwest Review.

Governor honors University worker

"Chapter Employee of the Year" certificates have been issued by Gov. Tom McCall to 27 state employees throughout Oregon, including a Eugene resident employed at the University.

This is the first phase of a program, sponsored by the Oregon State Employees Association, to select a "State Employee of the Year" for 1968.

Mrs. Pauline E. Allen, 2730 Elinor St., recipient of the award from Eugene, is assistant budget officer at the University.

All state employees, with the exception of elected officials, are eligible for the awards.

At present there are approximately 30,000 state employees. There are two main criteria by which the award recipients are chosen.

First, the employee is selected according to his dedication to his job. This is indicated by extra hours spent by the employee at the office and extra effort exerted in the way of improving his skills through extra training, or college courses aimed to improve his efficiency.

The other criteria by which an employee is judged is his dedication to the community. This is measured by his participation in civic and fraternal activities, such as offices held, church work and scout work.

Employees receiving chapter awards will not compete for "District of the Year" awards. One winner will be chosen in each of OSEA's nine districts throughout the state.

From these winners the "State Employee of the Year" will be chosen.

Gov. McCall will present the state award winner with a plaque at an awards banquet to be held in Salem Jan. 25, at which time district award winners will also be honored.

The state employee awards were initiated last year, first honoring the employees of 1967. Although sponsored by the 16,000-member organization, membership in OSEA is not required to be nominated or selected for an award.
