

Presidential inauguration...

"We have found ourselves rich in goods but ragged in spirit; reaching with magnificent precision for the moon, but falling into raucous discord here on earth," he said.

Nixon said "We cannot learn from one another until we stop shouting at one another."

As in the past, Nixon asserted that "after a period of confrontation, we are entering an era of negotiation. Let all nations know that during this administration our lines of communication will be open. We seek an open world—open to ideas, open to the exchange of goods and people, a world in which no people, great or small, will live in angry isolation."

What has to be done, has to be done by government and people together or it will not be done at all. The lesson of past agony is that without the people we can do nothing; with the people we can do everything.

Nixon said, "With the energies of the people enlisted, we can build a great cathedral of the spirit—each of us raising it one stone at a time, as he reaches out to his neighbor, helping, caring, doing."

Alienation... Speech reactions...

ture. Halfway through the three-hour class period, the two groups switch places.

The discussion leaders are students who signed up for the class, then volunteered to lead group sessions. For this the student leaders receive additional credit.

Originally 1,100 copies of the class "contract" were printed. Two hundred more copies were needed.

The "contract" is an idea which Pearl originated. In it he states the obligation of the professor, the student leaders, and the students of the particular class.

When asked why he was willing to take on such a large class, Pearl said, "I don't believe I have the right to deny an education to anyone. If a person wants to go to my class, I don't have the right to deny him admission. It is my job to find a way to accommodate the needs of the class."

In his Monday lecture Pearl said, "I could say, '1,300 in a class! Can't be done. Limit it to 30.'"

"Or you can have the students act as teachers. Split into small groups. Everybody pitches in. Everybody helps and it is still possible to have an educational experience."

Many of the problems in America are caused by the fact that people do not have the choice of what they can do for a living, according to Pearl. He stated further that they are limited because they are not allowed to have an education.

"Our school system stinks," Pearl said. He elaborated by saying that it does not offer students the greatest freedom of choice of what they will be able to do with their education.

Pearl challenged students to question his opinions. "I am wrong. The whole world will prove I am wrong. But I am not as wrong as you are, and you will not be able to show that I am wrong unless you think about what is being said."

funds flowing to institutions of higher learning.

"There will be a new emphasis on funds for applied research and business-oriented training, as well as more interest in programs of increased local control.

"I can't say immediately whether our funds will go up or down, but we will have to explore new programs, particularly in industrial and sub-professional training areas. Priorities will change, and it will be the job of our office to let the faculty know about it."

Frances Nickerson, Dean of Financial Affairs, is already facing a cutback in Economic Opportunity Grants (EOG) of some $16,000,000 nationally. Colleges across the country will run an average of 80 per cent short of these funds in this fiscal year. This includes the University, he said.

"If Nixon doesn't do something about this he'll have to face the whole social revolution wrapped around his neck," Nickerson said.

This would mean re-doing, already approved legislation in Congress, he said. He's waiting to see if Nixon will take the necessary steps to secure more NDEA loan money, more work study money and more EOG money.

Bob Carl, director of the University's High School Equivalency program (HEP), said, "I don't think he'll have much of an influence on our program this year; we've already been granted a little more than last year. He may do some departmental switching, however, which could hurt us."

Not all the reactions concerned money. Political expectations worried some.

Joe Allman, professor political science and chairman of the Oregon McCarthy campaign said:

SAB to consider policy violations

Policy violations by two groups head today's agenda of the Student Administration Board.

Students for a Democratic Society are charged with moving a table inside the EMU lobby Wednesday. The Campus Crusade for Christ held a fundraising meet event, a wrestling meet, Jan. 6 without the required SAB approval.

Also on the agenda is a request from the ASUO Senate for the SAB to permit tables in the EMU lobby for a one-month trial period.

The SAB's consideration of this request will not affect the SDS case, SAB chairman Steve Rhodes said Monday, since SDS's violation has already occurred.

The SAB is also scheduled to vote on a proposal to open participation in student groups to non-students. Currently, only University students, faculty, staff and their families may hold membership in University-recognized groups.

Under the proposal non-students would be prohibited from voting, holding office or officially representing (signing requisitions) in the group, but could participate in any activities.

"Most of us are standing back and waiting. There is no clear indication of anything to make judgments on, but we can hope.

"The role of McCarthy will be much as before, part gadfly and part leader of reform. As a critic he can be a counterbalance to wrong decisions. He must be considered by the new administration because of his latent support," he said.

Alfred Williamson, a University Black student, commented on the inauguration speech: "It was awfully hypocritical, he did an awful lot of praying. Although he's a racist—look at his cabinet—he's also a politician. I think he'll treat Black people as a politician would: a force to deal with. Another thing I noticed—there weren't any Black people on the stand with him."

In one part of his speech Nixon said, that those who are sleeping can't take part in the American dream.

Bill Duff, of the Draft Information Center, consulted his colleagues before giving their reaction and then said: "We're all sleeping."

assignments during the inter-quarter breaks (using a computer if desired).

Perhaps this coming Spring term will actually see some form of computer registration tried. The pre-registration procedure recommended above, which can be held towards the end of this Winter quarter, is eminently suited to test the effectiveness of any proposed or potential computer registration system. Should such a computer centered effort fail in pre-registration it would still be possible to execute an effective registration using more traditional methods at the normal time.
