SIX PEOPLE CAN'T TAKE OVER A UNIVERSITY —but maybe 14,000 can

Two, or three, or four, or sometimes as many as six students assemble in an office on the third floor of the EMU . . . Eating lunch, doing homework, talking over last week's crises, answering the phone, or handing out course proposal forms to students and faculty members, willing to devote a few hours to making a "maybe" course a reality. . .

Sending and receiving letters; communicating ideas north, east and south; informing moms, dads, faculties, departments, taxpayers, legislators, et. al about the workings of their organization. Letting everyone . . . but the students on their campus . . . know what and why they are.

Six active students form the core of the SEARCH program at the University of Oregon. Six active students have direct recourse to a channel, a viable, working channel to educational policy and curriculum change within the University structure.

At SEARCH, we are in a position to place legitimate, student initiated reforms in front of members of the faculty, administration, or members of the various departments on campus. We are, in short, prepared to give any student the opportunity to have something to say about the education he is receiving. So how about it? Are you game for legitimate revolt?

(If you have an idea about a new course, expansion of pass/no pass grading, or anything else relevant to your education, bring it to the SEARCH Office, Room 305, Erb Memorial Union.)
