Dorms may open to married pairs

PORTLAND (P) — The day may come when married students live in Oregon's university dormitories, says Charles Johnson, acting president of the University of Oregon.

He told a committee of the Oregon Board of Higher Education Monday that revised dormitory living plans may combine single students, married students and some faculty members.

"Quite a few of the married students would like to live in the dormitories instead of in married student apartments, because they don't want to be bothered with cooking," he said.

Elizabeth Johnson, a board member, said students complain they cannot study in the dormitories.

"We must develop something that attracts rather than repels students," she said.

President Johnson said they want something that more resembles their homes.

Action committee formed; CSPA group tabs heads

"The rapping today will be on closed doors. We want to open those doors and show students how to walk through."

With this purpose in mind, the newly-formed Student Action Committee (SAC) of the School of Community Services and Public Affairs (CSPA) elected its first officers Tuesday night.

SAC, the student voice at the CSPA program, has "from the time it was created in October, has been concerned with formulating many of the policies at the University. Liz Margoliash, CSPA major said. We want to make people aware of what we're doing."

To acquaint students with SAC, a meeting will be held at 7:30 Sunday night in Hendricks Hall.

Aaron Wilkinson, newly elected co-ordinator of SAC, explained that SAC members are working "within the system," but he pointed out, "We want people to be aware of us, but we don't want to infer that they should necessarily join us. We have chosen our priorities and found that we can work successfully internally, but others can work from the outside."

Mark Fritzler, a CSPA graduate student, said SAC has an answer for the individuals who "want to do something but don't know where to go."

"We have or know of positions that are open for students. We found that faculty and administration people will listen to us and they respond," Fritzler commented.

Wilkinson said SAC members are currently becoming more active on the General Staff (the faculty decision-making board of CSPA). "In addition we're involved in instructional improvement, school goals and Search," he said.

Wilkinson said that SAC is an integral part of CSPA which is constantly seeking relevancy in new environments including the University. Miss Margoliash added, "We feel that classes should be a basis of learning, not the totality."

"We're training people to deal with people and right now we want to reach more than middle class people with big hearts," she said.

According to the three students, CSPA deals directly with social service, public administration and socially-oriented government administration. "But we're people-based rather than thing-based," Wilkinson said.

"We're seeking participation, relevancy. We want students to react now to what's going on around them. If we stay at this current level we'll simply vegetate and that will lead to stagnation," Fritzler concluded.

Democrats plan nomination study

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. George McGovern has been asked by Democratic National Chairman Fred Harris to head a group that will study reform of the party's nominating procedures.

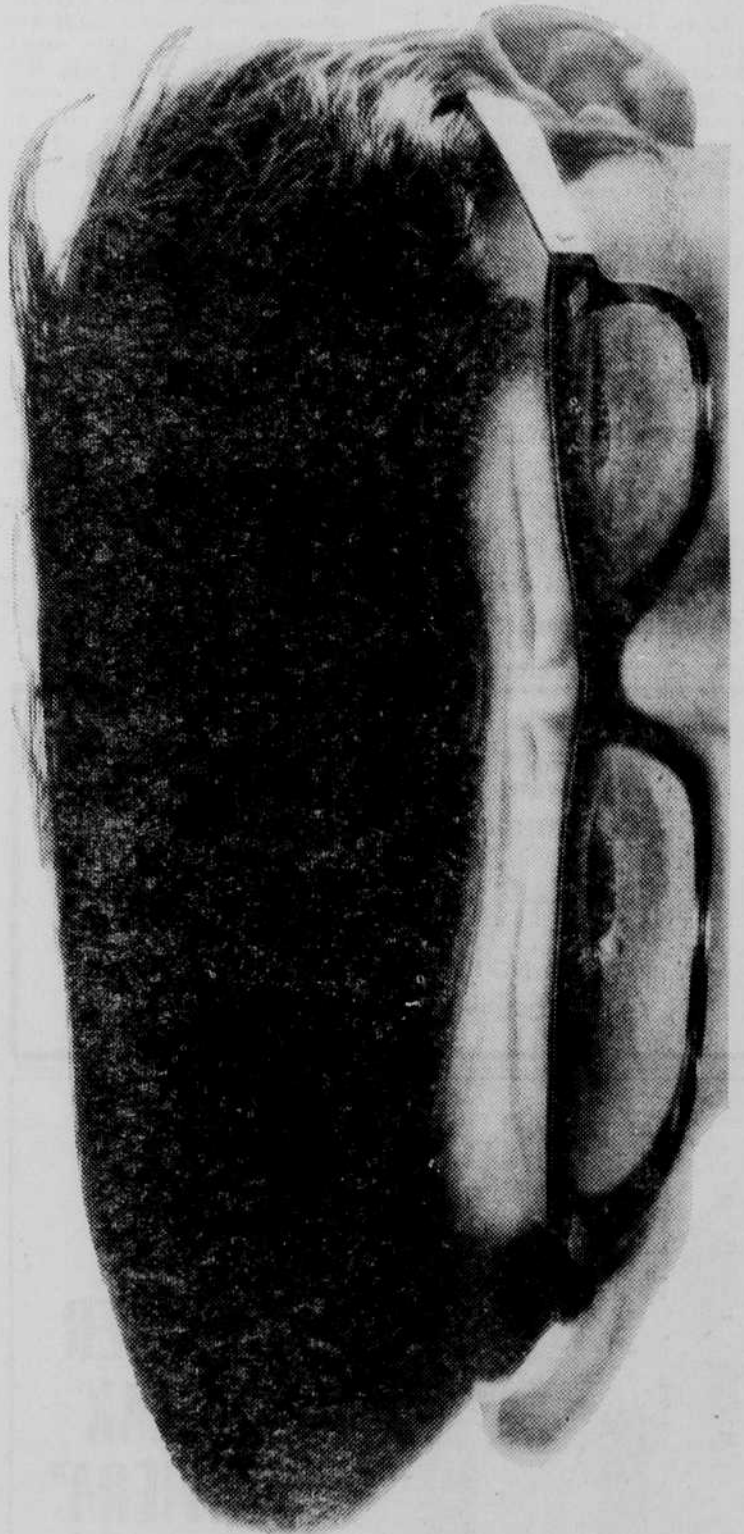

McGovern, a South Dakota Democrat, made a brief presidential bid last summer after the death of Sen. Robert Kennedy. He said in an interview today he is willing to undertake the task if all of the top party leaders agree.

Since McGovern has been a long-time ally of the party's Kennedy faction and a long-time personal friend of former Vice President Hubert Humphrey, party sources indicated a likelihood he will wind up with the job.
