Mt. Angel slates bishop, others for tele-lectures

Four prominent American public figures will speak via telephone this week during a series of lectures to be held at Mt. Angel College.

Saul Alinsky, Bishop James Pike, Robert McAfee Brown and Robert Lee will deliver speeches by tele-lecture, a new public address system which will broadcast the telephoned lectures to the college's Student Commons lounge.

The unique hook-up will enable the public to question each of the lecturers.

Alinsky will speak at 7 p.m. Tuesday on "American Power." Often known by the nickname "The Professional Radical," Alinsky is director of the Industrial Areas Foundation in Chicago.

Bishop Pike will lecture on "Dissent Within the Church" at 8 p.m. Wednesday. He is the former bishop of the Northern California Diocese of the Episcopal Church.

Brown, a Protestant theologian and professor of religion at Stanford University, will speak on "Humanism and the Church" at 8 p.m. Thursday.

Lee, whose credentials as playwright include the critically acclaimed "Inherit the Wind" and the successful stage adaptation of Patrick Dennis' "Auntie Mame," will lecture on "The Theatre of Optimism" at 3 p.m. Friday.

Lou Smith...

first," he said.

The main elements of Smith's proposed social structure are love and honesty. "We (Blacks) say the most important thing is self-love — positive, honest self-love in addition to family love and community love."

The Black nationalist used an imaginary swimming pool to illustrate his point. He drew a hill with a modern White-owned pool at the top. At the bottom was an old swimming hole, peopled with all other races.

"Every day for 400 years, people from the bottom pool would run up that hill and try to get in the White pool. Then one day they didn't try anymore."

"And the White man looked down and saw a great surge of activity at the lower pool and he cried, 'Hey, come on, you've got to come up and try and get in this pool.'"

And the people looked up from the bottom and answered, 'Hey man, we don't have time. We're building our own pool.' 'But the White man cried, 'You can't do that.'"

"The building didn't stop." In his drawing, Smith pointed to the depths of the White pool and explained, "While we were playing that game, the bottom of the pool became polluted and now, even White kids won't go in it."

"This is our revolution. The essence of real revolution is when we can offer an attractive alternate way of life and everyone can accept it," Smith said.

Besides fighting pollution, Smith said Blacks are fighting a way of life controlled by technology.

"That pool on top was built on money, not people. The system controls people. People should control the system; it should be their tool."

"Wealth must be taken from the system to allow man to become more creative. We've got to have some give and take, baby," Smith emphasized.

In this country, Smith said, few people are allowed to develop to their full potential.

"This is a country of dream-killers," he said. After a moment he added, "The hell with it — things are built out of dreams."

Tommy Anderson, Black panther and student at the University, and Paul Hoffman, director of ORI also spoke during the afternoon program.

Morning activities included a panel discussion on what Eugene is doing to combat poverty and crime. Wendy Ray, city manager's administrative assistant, and Capt. William Smith of the Eugene Police Department, sat on the panel.

Associated Press reported memorial services across the country for King. In Salem, ceremonies conducted on the Capitol steps were followed by a 25-minute House tribute to the Civil Rights leader.

A large painting was placed at the front of the House chamber by Black students from Martin Luther King Jr. School of Portland during the ceremony.
