

Group threatens assault on cross

EUGENE (P)—If the Skinner Butte Cross isn't removed by next Oct. 1, a Eugene group says it will move or modify the cross itself.

The threat was made by Chet Taylor, a University English instructor and spokesman for the group calling itself the Eugene Activists Council.

Earlier this week Taylor was fined $25 for taking a pickax to the ground around the base of the cross, which is located in a city park atop the butte at the north end of downtown Eugene.

The Activists Council wants the cross down, Taylor said, because the group feels a religious symbol has no business being on public property.

Legal efforts to remove it have thus far failed. The State Supreme Court has ruled that the cross can stay, although the high court has agreed to a rehearing of the case.

If the cross isn't down legally by Oct. 1, Taylor said, the Activists Council is considering several approaches for a new assault upon it. Among these, he said, are "the use of drag lines to pull it down, dynamite, jackhammers, making it over into another symbol, and painting it pitch red."

City officials had no comment.
