

'Just an observer...'

Anderson testifies in Circuit Court

Howard Anderson took the stand at Lane County Circuit Court for the first time Friday.

The University student spoke in his own defense against charges stemming from a "mock trial" of Navy recruiters last January 22 in the EMU.

Anderson is accused of "kicking and punching" Robert Barclay, a former University student.

"I was just an observer, you might say," Anderson claimed. He testified he was not near Barclay at the time of the alleged assault and did not know him.

Anderson said during the January incident he had been called to vote on charges which accused the Navy, as part of the military, of committing genocide in Vietnam. Friday, Anderson said he voted the Navy was "not guilty by reason of insanity."

Among witnesses called by the defense Friday was David Gwyther. Gwyther said the person who attacked Barclay was wearing a beret and a striped scarf. He identified the attacker as Tommy Anderson, Howard's brother. He also testified he had seen pictures taken by Greg Friedman, an alleged Oregon Daily Emerald photographer, that showed Barclay's assailant to be indeed Tommy Anderson.

James Douglas, investigator for the defense, next testified that a subpoena was served on Friedman ordering him to produce the pictures for Anderson's first trial in August. Douglas said that Friedman was present in the courthouse prior to the declaration of the mistrial.

Douglas said that a subpoena had been issued but he had been unable to find Friedman for this trial.

Robert McCrea, a law partner of the defense attorney, Ken Morrow, said he had interviewed Friedman last spring. Friedman, accompanied by an older female relative, had told him the pictures had been stolen from him or lost during a bus trip from Eugene to Portland shortly after the "Navy recruiting incident." McCrea also said that Friedman had expressed reluctance about becoming involved in the Anderson trial.

The trial will continue Tuesday at 10 a.m. when the prosecution will begin the cross-examination of Anderson.

New survey shows tuition rates rise

A new survey shows tuition charges at the nation's major public colleges and universities rose this year at a record rate of 16.5 per cent—a much steeper increase than had been expected. The office of institutional research of the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges reports that in-state tuitions at its 113 member colleges rose 16.5 per cent. At the 261 member institutions of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, in-state tuitions rose by 14 per cent.

For non-residents, the increases were 13.6 per cent for NASULGC members, and 10.1 per cent for AASCU members.

At the University, last year's tuition for in-state students was $123 a term. This year costs have risen to $136.

The general increase in fees apparently stem from increased pressures on state legislatures this year for shares of public funds. There does not appear to be substantial evidence that state legislatures have deliberately cut back funds for public institutions of higher learning as a result of fiscal backlash of student disruptions, the study indicated.

Yet, an Office of Education survey shows the nation's colleges and universities cut off federal aid to just over 350 students who took part in campus demonstrations last year.

Of the total of 405 institutions and components of systems of reporting to the two national associations this year's survey, all but 52 reported raising at least one charge over the past 12 months.
