 its organizers picked up their sound equipment and headed away along with at least half of the audience. Several hundred students, however, remained and carried on a heated dialogue with a portable microphone.

Their rank interspersed with numerous Viet Cong flags, the students discussed revolution, general strikes, and the need for radical change.

Many of those flag-wielding students had marched to the rally from the EMU terrace where they had listened to President Nixon's press conference on the war and domestic tension earlier in the evening.

Before the rally, chanting "One side's right, one side's wrong; victory to the Viet Cong," about 250 of the group marched through the dorms on campus and to the downtown park blocks, followed by several police cars.

After the downtown rally, about 150 persons, mostly the same students who had marched earlier from campus, headed chanting and singing, down Wilamette Street and back to the University.

Returning via 13th Avenue their numbers dropped to about 50 and police rushed to the scene when a fight almost broke out between the marchers and a motorist.

Contacted after the rally, Councilman Mohr said that the formal presentation ended with the speech by Miss Kroll, and that the other activities were not part of the program.

The student marchers told the Emerald that they were carrying Viet Cong flags in a show of solidarity with the Vietnamese people, and red flags as a show of solidarity with the American working class.

Nearly 1,000 march 'for God'

Editor's note: The following story appeared in Thursday's Emerald, but due to an accident in production, an advertisement appeared covering part of the story. Because of the number of people involved, the Emerald feels the story important enough to run again in its entirety.

Nearly a thousand sign-carrying demonstrators marched from the EMU terrace to the downtown park blocks Wednesday in a "March for God."

Rev. Wendell Wallace, of the Maranatha Baptist Church of Portland, told the marchers that "committed Christians have to come out from behind the barriers, and stand up for Jesus."

Computer Center offers services

Students, faculty members and administrators working to end the war in Southeast Asia will have a number of specialized services open to them in the coming days.

Among these will be the programming skill of personnel at the Computer Center and the assistance of a group of professors experienced in work with small groups.

Employees of the Computer Center, located across from the Co-op Bookstore on Kincaid St., told the Emerald Thursday that they are willing to use their programming skills "in the University's effort to end the war in Southeast Asia."

Individuals with computing problems related to the current crises may leave messages at ext. 2043.

Also, assistance will be given to persons regarding how to "most effectively" organize in the com-

Rev. Wallace is the pastor of a 70 per cent White-30 per cent Black church. The Black pastor joined with Northwest Christian College's singing group, the "Joyful Noise," at the Park Blocks, urging a great Christian revival in the United States.

The marchers, who included students from the University, NCC, Lane Community College, and local high schools carried signs, calling for a boycott of hell and banishment of Satan. One sign stated "I'd walk two miles for Christ."

The march was held on a non-political, non-denominational basis.

ASUO delegates see congressmen

Arriving in Eugene tonight will be the University's ASUO delegation to Washington, D.C. Members Dan Allison, Mike Kment, Rex Armstrong, Steve Neal and Linda Mills were appointed by the ASUO President to present petitions to and speak with Oregon's congressional delegates concerning Cambodia and student unrest.

ASUO delegates see congressmen

The students, all active in ASUO government, are meeting with congressmen this morning.

The delegation is a result of a decision by the ASUO Senate Thursday to allot $400 for them to travel to the nation's capital.
