News Roundup From AP Reports

SAIGON—U.S. Defense Secretary Melvin Laird will withdraw all of the remaining 25,000 U.S. Marines from South Vietnam by summer, it was learned Friday. The pull-out of the leathernecks will be part of an accelerated cutback of American troops here.

WASHINGTON—The U.S. Postal Service, facing a revenue deficit of $2.4 billion this fiscal year, is expected to raise the price of letter mail to eight cents by mid-April.

LONDON—Test-tube babies moved one step nearer, Nature magazine reported Thursday, when British scientists recently fertilized two human eggs in a laboratory and grew them to a stage where they might live if implanted in a woman's womb. Eventually, the scientists hope to give motherhood to women who normally are infertile because of defects in their fallopian tubes.

TEL AVIV—Israeli pilots who said they shot down four jets piloted by Soviet airmen told Sen. Edmund Muskie on Thursday the Russians weren't much better than the Egyptians they trained. Muskie is on a Middle East fact-finding tour. "We didn't find a big difference between the Russian and Egyptian fliers," one veteran Israeli aviator told the Democratic senator from Maine about the dogfights he said occurred last July near the Gulf of Suez.

WASHINGTON—Federal officials report a steady decline in the rate illegal residues of organic arsenic are found in poultry samples, but the number of violations remains higher than for any other farm feed additive. Officials stressed that residues of organic arsenic present no apparent human health hazard since the substance is far less toxic than inorganic arsenic—the poison made famous in fiction and history.

Egypt very leary about Jarring's visit to Israel

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. AP—U.N. special envoy Gunnar Jarring flew Thursday to Jerusalem for crucial talks with Israeli government leaders on ways to avoid a new outbreak in the dormant Middle East war.

In Cairo, the authoritative newspaper Al Ahram charged that Israel intended to drag on Jarring's Middle East peace talks "without end." It said Egypt would request a meeting of the U.N. Security Council within two weeks because of what it termed the apparent failure of Jarring to make any headway in the Arab-Israeli peace talks.

Egypt has said it would not extend the present cease-fire that expires Feb. 5 unless Israel agrees to a timetable for withdrawing its troops from Arab territory seized during the 1967 war.

Ambassador Yosef Tekoah, chief Israeli delegate to the United Nations, accompanied Jarring on the flight to Jerusalem where they will confer with Premier Golda Meir and Foreign Minister Abba Eban.

Mrs. Meir, in a speech in Tel Aviv, said she was "looking forward to the most important meeting" with Jarring.

Informed sources said the Israeli government would press three points: That there be an unlimited cease-fire during the negotiations; that Israel prefers holding the talks closer to the Middle East, perhaps Cyprus, instead of U.N. headquarters in New York, and that the talks be elevated so that the three participants—Israel, Egypt and Jordan—would be represented by their foreign ministers instead of ambassadors.

McGovern heads for Presidency

WASHINGTON AP—Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., cleared the way Thursday for a try at the White House by giving up chairmanship of a Democratic party reform commission whose work, he said, is nearly done.

McGovern said all but 16 state party organizations are at least half way to compliance with the commission's reform guidelines. He predicted that the 1972 Democratic National Convention would be the "least boss-ridden and most democratic in history."

Democratic National Chairman Lawrence O'Brien called McGovern's work "truly historic" and immediately appointed a commission member, Rep. Donald Fraser of Minnesota, to replace him. Fraser was recommended unanimously by the 28 commission members, McGovern said.

McGovern, whose presidential aspirations have been an open secret for a year or more, described as "fairly accurate" reports that he intends formally to announce his candidacy in about 10 days. "The details haven't been worked out," he said.
