

Winter term classes offered by Free school

By BARBARA SVENDSEN
Of the Emerald

If you've ever been sitting in class frantically taking notes, fighting to stay awake, and had it suddenly occur to you that this isn't what education is all about, then you might sign up for a course or two in the Lane County Free School.

You won't get any credit hours or degrees, but you might learn something.

Anyone can join the Free School (serving Lane County, but not a County organization) by paying the $3.50 per term tuition. Take or teach as many courses as you like.

According to Bill Wooten, co-founder of the Free School, the school is an outgrowth of informal discussion groups attended by people concerned about what is happening in the world and who seek an exchange of ideas, knowledge and resources. The first courses were offered in the summer of 1969. According to Cindy Wooten, more than 2,000 people have since participated in one capacity or another.

The Free School is headquartered in the Odyssey Coffee House, 713 Willamette, although most courses are offered in people's homes or wherever the class wants to get together.

All courses are offered, by community people, there being no "faculty" or "student" differentiation.

Course descriptions describing what course you plan to teach, when and where to meet) should be turned into the Odyssey by Friday for the Winter 1971 term. After the descriptions are all in, they will be compiled into a catalogue, which should be available the first week in February. Classes will run from Feb. 15 through May 15.

NASA scientist to speak today

A technical analysis of what almost became the first U.S. space disaster, the Apollo 13 accident, will be presented at the University today by NASA scientist Hans Mark.

The public is invited to attend, free of charge, the physics department colloquium at which Mark, director of the NASA-Ames Research Center, Moffetfield, California, will give his analysis.

The session is at 3:30 p.m., in 138 Commonwealth Hall.

Pick up your printouts today

Winter registration printouts will be distributed to students today and Friday in the Bottom of the Bowl of the EMU from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

If there is any error in your program, report it to the Office of the Registrar immediately to avoid any kind of misunderstanding about your class registration and grade options.

The Oregon Daily Emerald is published Monday through Friday during school year, except during exam and vacation periods. Twice weekly during 8-week summer session; once weekly during 3-week summer session, by the Publications Board of the University of Oregon.

Second-class postage paid at Eugene, Oregon 97403. Subscription rates $10 per year, $9.00 academic year, $3.50 per term.
