Series on aging offered

A series of courses in how to deal with one's aging parents, relatives and friends is being offered by the Oregon Center for Gerontology and the Division of Continuing Education. The classes will broaden understanding of the aging process and will provide a background for many of the problems faced by the elderly. The series will be presented from 7:30 to 9:30 Tuesday evenings from Jan. 11 to March 14, at the Celeste Campbell Senior Center, 1515 High Street. The cost of the series is $12 for all ten lectures, or $1.50 for each individual lecture attended.

Italian summer credit

This year, for the first time, students will be able to receive University credit for attending the summer session at the Italian University for Foreigners at Perugia, Italy.

All courses are taught in Italian by Italian professors and include Italian language, literature, history, philosophy, drama, art and music. Undergraduate students, who must have a B average to enroll, may earn 8-12 quarter hours of credit at the University.

According to Sylvia Giustina, University instructor in Italian, who is coordinating the program, beginning students in Italian will be accepted, but those with a previous knowledge of the language have a wider range of courses from which to choose.

Cost for tuition and fees is $180. Individual students arrange for their own travel, and for room and board. Students will be helped to locate lodgings from a list made available by the Italian University.

Applications should be submitted before April 1 to Sylvia Giustina, Department of Romance Languages, University of Oregon, Eugene, Oregon 97403.

Suderburg said the Commission has asked the University faculty for advice, review comments, or for participation in various programs, and that the Commission in turn has made data available, provided classroom guest lecturers, and joined with faculty in related studies.
