Alumnus now prime minister

Aziz Sidky, new prime minister of Egypt, is an alumnus of the University where he was awarded a master of architecture degree in 1948.

Sidky was one of a number of Egyptian students then attending the University according to one of his professors, Wallace Hayden, professor emeritus of architecture.

"I was impressed then," says Hayden, "with how carefully those students were shepherded by the Egyptian government. It was the condition of their scholarships to study in America that they return to Egypt and devote their energies to developing their homeland."

He remembers Sidky as a "good student" who was interested in urban planning, management and administration.

The new prime minister went to Harvard for two years after he left the University and, according to news reports, obtained a Ph. D. there. He first entered the Egyptian cabinet in 1956.

University enrollment down

This term's enrollment at the University dropped 200 from last winter term's figures. According to officials, the University's enrollment at the close of formal registration Friday was 14,493 compared to 14,691 students at this time last year.

The decreased enrollment this year has marked the end of the period of steady growth that has continued through the 1960s.

The declining number of students has been attributed to numerous factors by State System of Higher Education Officials including easing of draft regulations, the economic recession, higher tuition and general disillusionment with society and with formal education on the part of some students.

Don Willner, state senator from Portland and announced candidate for Sen. Mark Hatfield's seat on Congress, will be the guest tonight on Art Pearl vs. the World. The radio show will be broadcast live from the Laurelwood Country Club at 7 p.m. and carried over KZEL-FM, 96.1.

The University Chamber Choir, directed by Neil Wilson, will appear in concert at 8 tonight in the University School of Music Recital Hall.

The choir will present selections from the Baroque period, including English and Italian madrigals. Two German sacred choral works are on the program "Deutsches Magnificat" by Schutz for double chorus, and Bach's widely known motet, "Jesu meine Freude."

There is no admission charge for the concert.
