

On Campus

Black History week slated

A series of public events will take place at the University February 21-26 in observance of national Black History Week.

Edwin L. Coleman, assistant professor of English at the University, is coordinating local arrangements.

Works by students in his black literature classes will be featured in displays on all three floors of the University Library, which will include poetry, plays, photographic essays, short stories and historical and folklore papers.

Another exhibit will begin Tuesday evening in the Co-Op.

Dads Day revived

Dad's Day is being revived at the University, according to the Oregon Dads' Club state president, Tom Fohl of Portland.

For the past two years the Dads have not made a visit to the campus for their own special day. In 1971 they joined with the Oregon Mothers for a Parents Weekend in May. Now they want to do it the old way.

Dads may spend a day Saturday visiting with their sons and daughters, holding a membership meeting, and attending basketball games.

Announcements have been mailed to all Dads and a good attendance is expected.

Unique concert scheduled

A concert of the combined Eugene Harp Sextette and the Portland Koto Players is scheduled for 2:00 p.m., Sunday. The concert, which is part of the University's annual Festival of Arts, will be in the Recital Hall of the School of Music.

The concert is thought to be the first of its kind ever produced in the United States.

The Koto is a traditional Japanese instrument, belonging to the same family of East Asian instruments as the zither.

Among the selections to be performed by the koto players will be the "Dance of the Ripples," "Song of the Spinner," and "Cherry Blossom."

The Harp Sextette will perform "Kleine Suite Voor 6 Harpen," by contemporary Dutch composers van Delden and Flothuis. Then the sextette will combine with the kotos to present the American premiere of several Japanese arrangements and compositions.

The Consul-General of Japan in portland, the honorable Keisuke Ochi, and his wife will attend the unique concert. They will also be present at an open reception for the performers after the concert in the Recital Hall.

Smith announces candidacy

Captain William Smith, 50, of the Eugene Police Department, announced his candidacy for the office of Lane County Sheriff Thursday.

Smith, currently superintendent of the City-County Jail, said he was running because he feels "my educational background gives me the opportunity to serve a larger community."

He said he favored turning operation of the jail over to the county, but only after "the new attempts at turning the facility into a correctional facility" are completed. He added that if elected sheriff, he would "continue the present thrust and direction in the jail."
