TOGETHER

The ads say "Can an X-rated movie be made that women would want to see or husbands would take their wives to?" You may well ask yourself whether this is a simple "come-on," but on second thought, most people will realize that no movie theatre owner in his right mind would encourage people to come — for FREE or not — to see something that would be offensive to a majority of the audience. This is not to say that some of you will not be shocked by what you see. As is true with all movies, not everyone who has seen Together has like it.

Together is an X-rated movie and herein lies the problem. An X-rating today is commonly accepted as a definition for smut. Together is not a "dirty" movie, but how do you convince the public? How do you reach an audience? One of the ways is what we're doing here today, inviting YOU to a sex movie.

Together is the creation of 29-year old director Sean Cunningham who is married, has two children, and lives in Westport, Connecticut. The film is a personal statement of his feelings towards love and sex, towards making your wife not only your lover but also your friend. The emphasis is on awareness and understanding between those in love and the establishment of a meaningful dialogue that is open and honest and unashamed about the sexual relationship.

The movie is idealistic, romantic and lyrical. It is also explicit and sensual. The balance of these qualities is what gives the film its essential credibility and honesty. It should be accepted as a serious work, and not just an excuse to show a great deal of nudity or a fetish for examining some of the more bizarre aspects of sex. Together is concerned with human beings, not objects.
