Protestors dig . . .

"We want to keep people for the next week or ten days—we particularly want people at Saturday's 11 a.m. march and noon rally. We want to build up to a mass city-wide canvas and what amounts to a student strike May 1, with students canvassing the city that day.

"We're going to try to get the (academic) department's organized and we'll have an organizational meeting for the strike on Monday night—Probably in the EMU."

The demonstrators left the Fenton Hall rally at about 8:35 p.m., headed up 13th Ave., through the EMU and toward the dorms.

They chanted "join us" to students in the EMU and the dorms, and several dorm fire alarms were set off in an effort to get students outside.

The marchers threaded their way through the Bean complex courtyard and out into 15th Ave., past Gerlinger Annex, down 17th Ave. and up Alder to the Army and Air Force ROTC buildings.

An estimated 100 persons joined the marchers on the way to the ROTC buildings.

Chanting "dig it, dig it," the demonstrators dug three holes throwing the dirt clods on the ROTC steps. An argument over whether the uprooted ROTC sign should be pushed to the middle of Alder street broke out, but most of the demonstrators were already on the way back to the EMU at that time.

"We made our point (by digging holes)," one protestor said.

The marchers returned to the EMU, where they paraded around the Fishbowl and then listened to several speakers call for support for upcoming anti-war activities.

One speaker, calling the bomb crater at the ROTC buildings "a good beginning," called for the crowd to dig some holes in the Johnson Hall front lawn.

About 175 protestors paraded to Johnson Hall, where they dug two craters and threw dirt clods on the building's steps.

When police arrived, a man with a bull horn urged the protestors to "get it together at the (student) union." Most of the group milled around on the EMU side of University Street—with the officers on the other side.

By 10:25 p.m., most of the demonstrators had gone home.
