ASUO Senate to consider request

To make a record or not to make a record?

This is the question facing the ASUO Senate at its meeting at 7 p.m. today in the EMU. The senate will be considering a request for a $350 allocation to make a recording of The Ballad of French Pete. The song was written by local singer Jon Hoffman, and sung into the public record at a recent French Pete Hearing sponsored by the ASUO. The request for funds comes from the Survival Center, and Survival Center members hope to get a prominent artist such as Mason Williams to record the song.

Included in the record request bill is another request for $150 for fliers to be circulated on environmental issues including French Pete and the Minam River. The bill received a do-pass recommendation from the ASUO Fiscal Committee Wednesday night.

Two 4-J levies close to defeat

Eugene voters apparently rejected two ballot serial levy measures for new construction in the Eugene 4-J School District election Wednesday.

With one polling place left to report at 10:15 p.m., a $321,596 levy for construction of vocational facilities at the four Eugene high schools was being defeated by Eugene voters by a vote of Yes-5033, No-5660 margin.

Another serial levy of $194,964, which would have provided for 15 new classrooms at four elementary schools in the district, was going down to defeat; Yes-3663, No-7051.

School district officials estimated the turnout at 13 per cent.

"I don't make a moral judgment on drugs, but from a health standpoint, I think the project is vital," he said.

The DIC works in cooperation with White Bird Clinic. Both offer free services. "I'd like to keep it that way," Miller said. The DIC is funded through Student Community Projects, which in turn receives funds from the ASUO. Miller said he couldn't estimate the cost of operating the project, but said funding presents no major problem.

In the past, White Bird Clinic offered a drug analysis service, but because of legal problems, the program was rejected by former District Attorney John Leahy. The Eugene City Police department analyzes drugs, but only those which are confiscated. The nearest drug analysis facility outside Eugene is located in Portland.

The DIC hopes its project can be coordinated with the drug information program currently being used by the Eugene City Police Department. It would serve the entire Eugene-Springfield area.

"We feel there has to be a coordinated effort in drug education," said Eugene Police Chief Dale Allen. "It (the drug analysis project) has the potential for serving a useful function in the community," he continued.

"Basically, everything is ready to go," said Miller. "All we need now is the 'ok' from the district attorney. It's a vital program; it's needed in this area. I'm confident that it will work," he said.
