University student named as alternate

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Fourth District Congressman John Dellenback (R-Ore.) has named 20-year-old Steve Greenwood, a University student, as his alternate delegate to the National Republican Convention.

"I firmly believe that we need the participation of the newly enfranchised voter, the 18-20 year-olds, in the electoral process," Dellenback said. "Participation in the party politics of the Republican National Convention is an essential part of that process. Steve Greenwood will strengthen Oregon's representation in Miami Beach August 21-23," Dellenback said.

Greenwood, a 1969 graduate of Eugene's Churchill High, will start his senior year at the University this fall. He is studying community service and public affairs.

In 1971 Greenwood was one of the principal organizers of the Eugene-Springfield Walk for Development which raised over $50,000 for people suffering from hunger and poverty.

On Tuesday, July 11, three conservation films will be shown, beginning at 8 p.m., in 138 Commonwealth, at a meeting of the Sierra Club to which the public is invited.

HEW funds Gerontology Center

Helping older people face retirement realistically and with confidence is the goal of a program developed by the Oregon Center for Gerontology, and funded recently by the Administration on Aging of the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The HEW grant of $96,489 is for the first year of a five-year program for developing and evaluating pre-retirement education programs in business, industry and government, and in other institutions such as senior centers and churches.

Dr. Frances Scott, director of the Oregon Center for Gerontology in the University's College of Education will direct the project, along with U. Vincent Manion and Donna McKenzie, both Gerontology Center staff members.

According to Dr. Scott, three types of pre-retirement programs will be studied. The first is a lecture series directed at those facing retirement, the second type includes some group discussion, and the third is described as human relations counseling in which group members learn from each other with direction from an experienced leader.

Shakespeare authority visits class

John T. Campbell, noted Shakespeare authority and actor, will be visiting professor Rocket's Shakespeare class Thursday, July 6 at 11:30 a.m.

Campbell has appeared on numerous programs on television in the past 2½ years, from "A Fine Frenzy" on national tour to the title role of Hamlet in "Hamlet: Fall of a Sparrow" and more recently, in an improvisational cameo as the fool in "This Great Stage of Fools."

Campbell spent his childhood in Ashland where he had seen all of Shakespeare's plays acted while still in his teens. He made his acting debut in Ashland's 1956 production of "Richard III."

Campbell is in Eugene this week to publicize "Vacation Shakespeare" a two week study course complete with special classes, dramatic workshops, seminars and a three day trip to the Oregon Shakespearean Festival for all the plays.
