

You've got a place in the Emerald

The Oregon Daily Emerald, the student-operated, student-published newspaper at the University of Oregon, will be publishing five times a week this fall, winter and spring. Monday through Friday.

As a student newspaper, we always are in need of more help. You can provide that help. And you can help in any way you want:

— If you like reporting, we need you — for beat coverage, general assignments, or both. We especially would like persons who would like to do "people"-type reporting, examining people as just themselves, what they think, why they think it. Also, copy editors are welcome.

— If you're a photographer, or would like to learn, we need you to cover a wide variety of day assignments and spot assignments. Also, we need people who are capable of producing feature material, stuff that photography pages are made of.

— If you like sportswriting, we need you to cover spot assignments and feature stories.

— If you want to sell ads, we need you to apply for several ad sales positions still available.

And the positions are all open — now.

All of our jobs pay. Some of them not as much as others, but all pay something.

More than the money, though, the Emerald can offer you real work experience — in nearly every area of newspaper journalism. Students who have been working in college journalism, who have gained experience in the field and who have gained expertise — through combinations of experience and training — are ready and willing to offer you training and assistance.

You don't have to be a journalism major to work on the Emerald. You just need an interest. On whatever area of the newspaper you're interested in — reporting, photography, advertising — the Emerald has a place for you.

If you're interested in becoming part of the Emerald, stop on up at the office, 301 Allen Hall.

(The Emerald is an Equal Employment Opportunity Employer. Women and Minority persons are encouraged to apply.)
