

Busy day in Salem

Today is going to be a busy day for student interests at the state legislature in Salem.

At nine this morning, the Education Coordinating Council is holding a meeting to discuss planned cutbacks in students loans for minority education and to make plans to try and get the state government to replace the federal funds.

The national budget President Nixon has presented to the Congress would almost eliminate these formerly federally-funded loans.

Student leaders, three from each campus, will meet with Gov. Tom McCall for lunch and will then hold a two hour conference with the governor and his staff.

After the meeting with the governor is finished, the student leaders plan to break up into two groups and meet with leaders in the Senate and House.

Abortion service packet compiled

A packet of information to aid in establishing free referral service in all communities has been compiled by the Seattle Abortion Birth Control Referral Service.

The package will include information on the recruitment of supportive doctors, volunteers, donations, and information about abortion laws and procedures.

According to the Service, women have had trouble locating sympathetic physicians in states where abortion laws are liberal. The Service points out that profit seekers have taken advantage of this and set up services which charge high prices for referrals to doctors who will perform abortions.

The recent Supreme Court ruling legalizes abortion nationally. The Referral Service claims that, in order to avoid exploitation by paid referral services, "it is urgent that concerned women join together on local levels to establish reliable volunteer information centers."

The packet of information is available through: Abortion Birth Control Referral Service, 4224 University Way NE, Seattle, Wash. 98105. Phone: 206-ME 4-3460 (11 a.m. to 3 p.m.) or 206-ME 2-4747 (at other times).
