Any adhering punch pieces must be picked off the back so as not to foul the computer.

why vote?

I wonder of the need to hold elections at all.

Yet the issues are there. It's a pity the candidates - so far - don't seem to understand them: worse - some experienced candidates - who should know better - by their statements demonstrate a clear lack of knowledge of the nature of the jobs and a miniature concept of the nature of 'leadership' and the implications of managing a business worth over $1 million.

Co-governance is a myth, right now. No university President in Oregon has supported more the concept of student representation in University affairs and student involvement in Administrative decisions (more) than Robert Clark. It's unlikely that this support will ever be replicated again from his successor. For perhaps the first time we are going to lose his 'rubber stamp' on our Budget. And we'll never get it back. No administration, let alone the State Board or the Legislature are going to be comfortable allowing five students disbursing $1 million. Student government of this campus - by far the best in Oregon, the most advanced on the Pacific Coast, and one of the most sophisticated in the nation - will be reduced to what so many others are. We got rid of that (latter) type of government when we got rid of the Senate. But it was a beginning, not an end. We must rewrite the ASUO Constitution to include proper checks and balances - perhaps by enlarging both the membership and the scope of the Incidental Fee Committee. Next year the ASUO Executive, the Constitution Committee and the special co-governance Committee must rise above the politics of the past year, must dispense with the naive platitudes of "them versus us" administration vs. students and must realize that the confidentiality and trust, which are part of the requirements of any worthwhile relationship, are more critical at that level. Confrontation will not realise co-governance. Reason could. Sure it'll be difficult. And there's only a short year to do it in. And not too many students and faculty understand what's involved - yet. But whoever is elected President and Vice-President of this campus will have a mandate for responsibility, for rationality, for compassion, so that the foundation that has been started these past months, so that the effective management of student programs in next years, will be secured.

37,000 students at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, voted last week for a new student body president. The leading candidates got 543 votes and the opposition 232, 85, and 56 votes respectively. (Last year's University of Wisconsin Student Government President, Tim Higgins, is now President of the National Student Association, the 'national government' of student governments). We're so far ahead of that it's not even funny. But we would return to that level if the vision of next year's ASUO President and Vice-President is limited to the perspectives which some of the declared candidates demonstrate. It's not a sinecure: It's an opportunity to grow in so many ways. It's also an opportunity to serve all of us, students, faculty, administrators and staff, in this supposedly academic community.

Two candidates will be elected. Your vote will help decide whether so-called "political commodities" or real students are given that mandate. You're, therefore, part of the problem. You could be part of the solution. Please Vote . . . Thanks.
