Acme-Bijou & Films of Bunuel proudly present

L'Age D'Or

by Luis Bunuel & Salvador Dali

L'Age D'Or was seized and burned by the Paris police in 1930 when the audience rioted and destroyed the theater. Fortunately two prints survived and the film has recently been made available for public screening.

"L'Age D'Or pivots round the obsessive and frustrated love between Gaston Modot and Lya Lys. For the surrealists, obsession was the great liberating force which society repressed and transformed into decency, propriety and human sympathy. For Bunuel these virtues were simply the sentimental coating within which the bourgeoisie concealed its institutions of violence, torment and destruction. Humanitarianism was nothing but the guilty reaction formation by which a bourgeoisie which oppressed and exploited without compunction for its own survival, was able to atone for its power and its comfort and recognize itself in the image of the suffering servant."
