

IFC scrimps, saves, adjusts

The Asian-American Student Union, the Migrant Labor Project and Incidental Fee Committee members requesting that part of their salaries be used for the university's work-study program were the main business of Tuesday's meeting of the Incidental Fee Committee (IFC).

The IFC passed a request from Gary Kim, president of the Asian-American Student Union, to release $156.98 from the AASU's travel reserve for an Asian-American conference in San Jose July 6. The IFC passed his request on the condition that Kim make a report about the conference through the Emerald.

Migrant Labor Project President Theresa Moreno proposed a revision of the project's 1973-74 budget. At the present, $1260 is allocated for the project's director, and $480 for its secretary. No salaries have been provided for either the project's assistant director or consultant.

Moreno asked for a redistribution of salary funds so that the director, the assistant director, the consultant and the secretary each receive $360. IFC chairman Randy Shilts praised the proposal and noted that the project's revised budget will save ASUO $300. The Migrant Labor Project works closely with the migrant community to educate the university about migrant labor problems and programs.

Moreno explained the duties of the staff members in a report IFC chairman Randy Shilts. The program director has the responsibility of administering and directing the Migrant Labor Project and its community oriented programs. The assistant director handles projects that will "bridge the gap between the student body and the project's community programs." He is in charge of advising and providing discussion when it concerns the University and ASUO programs that the project can work with. The assistant director is also responsible for the Migrant Conference in Oregon that will be held on campus fall term. The consultant co-ordinates referral systems and information that can be utilized by the director for community projects and the upcoming conference.

could not otherwise afford, and Shaffer says it's competing with "30 to 50" private marketing operations.

OIC publicity has stressed the value of its program to the state's economy (though it aids inventors from the entire Pacific Northwest). As Shaffer picked up the safety chains and headed back to his cramped quarters, he focused on the value of the program to the student and society.

"We're trying to produce a technology that has a value," Shaffer urged. "We're trying to produce young people that have more interest, more concern in technology."

It's also a lesson for the student: "He or she says 'it's mine'...once they're inspired it gives the student drive...They get slapped around and knocked around...The bank won't give them the backing. The manufacturer says 'the hell if we're gonna produce that.'"

Shaffer adds, "You get an awful lot of mileage out of my people. I'll back my tigers against any organization in the country. I'll defend them to the death when they make a mistake...that's what life is all about."

With almost $800,000 coming to Shaffer's OIC over the next five years, more students will get to learn about life the way he wants them to. And Shaffer might get a bigger office.
