Academic committee applications due today

Today is the deadline for Academic Committee applications, according to Paula Brown, ASUO public relations officer. Eight committees, a total of 18 positions, are open to applicants.

"The purpose of these committees," Brown said, "is to provide a means for students to have more of a say in their own academic affairs. Any student is eligible to apply for a position, and all applicants will be interviewed, with selections announced early next week.

"These appointments will serve only for the remainder of the summer," she said. "In the fall, new committees will be chosen for the academic year 1973-74."

The Status of Women Committee has 3 openings and serves as an advisory to the president, faculty and students in developing affirmative action programs. It stimulates career development programs for women and encourages greater participation by women in academic governance.

The Academic Occasions Committee, with 3 unfilled positions, plans commencement and graduation convocation exercises and the annual observance of Charter Day.

One position is vacant on the Academic Requirements Committee, which is responsible for the administration and interpretation of academic requirements for undergraduate degrees. It is also responsible for action on student petitions for exceptions to these requirements and to other academic regulations.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Committee, 1 position, advises the president and other personnel officers of the University and the faculty on practices and procedures to insure equal employment opportunities in the University "without regard to sex, race, color, creed, religion, political beliefs, national origin, or any other extraneous considerations."

The Student Conduct Committee, 1 position, recommends policies relating to student conduct and administers the Student Conduct Code.

Two positions are open on the Scholastic Deficiency Committee, which administers and interprets policy regarding students whose work has fallen below University scholarship standards. It also passes on petitions for reinstatement and for change of grade.

The New Student Orientation Committee, 4 positions, plans the University's program of orientation for new students (on-campus programs plus materials mailed to prospective students).

The Assembly and University Lectures Committee, 3 positions, plans programs and lectures to be given at the University.
