Average citizens comment on televised public hearings

WASHINGTON

(UPI)

The Watergate hearings are in their third month—since May 17, with only a few breaks, the live drama that replaced the canned pathos of soap opera has been daily television fare.

Never before has such a large segment of the American public been exposed to a continuing story. Some resent it—television stations have been deluged with calls demanding reinstatement of the quiz programs and soap operas. For others it has been a chance to see history in the making and determine their own viewpoints without the middleman of newspapers, magazines or network news.

What has it meant to those watching it? To a Boston stripper it proves "high officials can't get away with things illegal." A Salt Lake City housewife who twice voted for President Nixon feels "impeachment should be seriously considered." For an Elgin, Ill., machinist the hearings are just "going round and round without making much progress."

A random sampling of viewpoints:

—Tom Dally Sr., a 54-year-old livestock market owner in Sonial Circle, Ga.: "I've seen about 60 per cent of the hearings and I read all I can on it. I think the President should have told the whole story earlier from his viewpoint. What he does now will be questioned because of the competent witnesses that have appeared before the committee.

—Joan Cartland, 36, a Malden, Mass., mother of three who has gone back to college to become a medical technician: "All the Meeting . . .
