

Morse...

portunity," Morse says, the fire out of his voice. "I have never given up my confidence and trust in people—once you get the facts to them.

"That is our job."

He stands up, smiles—a twinkle appearing in his eyes—shakes hands. It's getting late and he has to work on a credit union speech for Friday in Portland.

He sticks on his brown tweed hat with a tiny feather tucked in the ribbon around the brim, smooths the tan topcoat he never took off and strolls over worn, greenish-brown, flat carpet through the thin door and across the slippery parking lot to his car.

The group that had listened watches him go, showing their admiration for a person who opposed the war in Vietnam before they were through grade school and who talked of impeachment when the mere mention of the word conjured up notions of craziness—especially if you were a white-haired man over 70.

Wards case discussed

The Oregon Student Public Interest Research Group (OSPIRG) has decided upon a new tactic for stopping the construction of the Montgomery Ward Store at Valley River Center.

The OSPIRG Board of Directors decided Thursday, on the advice of Eugene Planning Commission head James Pearson, to investigate the possibility of finding a private citizen interested in being involved in a law suit. The lawsuit would charge that the city council's decision of Oct. 8, which approved the rezoning of property by Valley River Center for the construction of the Ward's store, did not meet the necessary requirements of the Fasano Decision.

A meeting will be held Monday night for members of community interested in becoming involved in such a suit. OSPIRG itself cannot bring suit because of an agreement made with the Oregon State Board of Higher Education in 1971, when OSPIRG was founded. They cannot engage in any type of litigation, according to this agreement. OSPIRG board member Peter Glazer said that he didn't know "how much more research OSPIRG can do on the issue without becoming too involved."
