

Future of concerts to be decided

(Continued from Page 1) front and the fire land that must be maintained. Hunter called the crowd one of the most unruly he had ever had to work with.

In addition to the complaints that EMU officials received because of the abbreviated Ramblin' Jack Elliot performance, Hunter said he received numerous complaints from people who could not see because of the crowd in front of the stage, and the excessive amounts of alcohol and the glass debris that it caused.

According to members of the EMU Cultural Forum, no decision has been made on the future of upcoming concerts. They say they will have to wait until later in the week when all the facts are presented. Neil Murray, staff member of the Cultural Forum put partial blame for the troubles on the lateness of the show which seemed to invite people to get even looser than they normally do for a concert.

Not only are concerts in the Ballroom in jeopardy, but the EMU Cultural Forum will now take an even more serious look at Mac Court where a situation like the one that occurred at the Ballroom would mean Mac Court would be closed permanently for concerts. At press time there is no word as to the effect the Ballroom incident will have on use of the Court for a proposed Van Morrison concert in February.

THANK YOU!

The Oregon State Employees Association Chapter 77 wishes to thank those 250 faculty members who responded to the Collective Bargaining Survey. The results are summarized as follows:

FAVORING COLLECTIVE BARGAINING				AGENCY BELIEVED MOST EFFECTIVE
Organization Membership	N	Percent Yes	Percent No	Organization	Percent Yes	Percent No
OSEA	65	86	14	OSEA	45	15
AAUP	38	58	42	AAUP	34	69
OSEA-AAUP	28	54	46	AFT	19	10
AFT	13	93	7	NEA	2	6
Other Organizations	6	67	33		100	100
Unaffiliated	95	71	29
Total	245	71	29
No Answer	5

17 percent of the group did not respond to this question.

Yes indicates those who voted Yes for Collective Bargaining preferred this agency.

No indicates those who voted No for Collective Bargaining preferred this agency.

Stickers 'strike' against lighting

At the University, the light switches just won't look the same.

Because of the energy crisis, the University is placing stickers over all its light switches, urging users to turn off the lights.

The stickers have a bright yellow lightning bolt flashing across a blue background. In the lower left corner appears one word: "save."

William Korns, University relations director, had the initial idea for the sticker about two months ago. "You know like in those cartoons where someone gets an idea and the light bulb goes on over his head? Well, the light bulb went on," he said.

Korns printed up 16,000 of the stickers, which were designed by University publications assistant Greg Sundberg. Korns said it cost $350 to have the stickers printed.

University Physical Plant Director Harold Babcock said he has no idea how well the stickers will work in suggesting that University employees keep their lights turned off.

County official predicts increased vocational ed

A rise in vocational education as a result of new high school graduation requirements is in the future for Eugene schools, Bob Wynia, Lane County Social Service Director said Thursday.

"There is no planning system for education," said Wynia, in a presentation at a noon meeting of the Lane Council of Governments Educational Planning Committee (LCOG). Formerly a State Department of Education expert, Wynia spoke on "Directions in Education." Some of the directions Wynia foresees are:

—Kindergartens will proliferate with the advent of 50 per cent state funding with daycare centers and pre-school facilities showing a similar increase.

—New high school graduation requirements that stress vocational education will direct learning away from the traditional liberal arts.

—The new requirements will cause a decline in demand for vo-tech courses in community colleges, resulting in an enrollment drop for those institutions.

—Funds impounded from 1973 appropriations have recently been ordered released by the courts. This will result in $2-3 million going to career education.

—Individual participation of citizens will decline and public interest groups will monopolize input at school board meetings. This, combined with a tendency for school superintendents to become "place bound" (rather than "career bound") and entrenched in the community and the community power structure will constitute a regressive trend in education. The interest groups will manipulate the system for non-educational gains and the stagnating superintendents won't be able to, or desire to, stop them.

—Increased teacher militancy stemming from new collective bargaining legislation will soon be evident.

—Intermediate Education Districts (IED) will decline. These are agencies set up to help rural areas obtain services available to the city.

—Computer use will increase and so will the need to consolidate area government's computer facilities.

Wynia hopes to see a complete overhaul of the educational system with special emphasis on "people problems" such as mental health, economic problems, and community education.
