The Cry of The People

The film destroys any tourist impression of quaint charm and by showing the working conditions of the tin miners removes Che's involvement with them from the realm of slogan.

"The film leaves one with feelings of rage for the forces of self-interest which have shamelessly and viciously mutilated Bolivia's potential . . . It is a hundred times more informative and more important than anything I've ever seen . . . It is film as revolutionary force."

"Que Pasa Raza?" is the title of the three-day Chicano conference to be held in the EMU, Thursday through Saturday. The conference, presented by Chicano students at the University in conjunction with the Chicano Mobile Institute will attempt to sensitize and inform the public as to the needs of Chicanos and their present exclusion from the power structure.

The objective of the conference is, "to provide more opportunities for decision-makers in higher education and the community, especially Anglo-American administrators and teachers, to better understand the issues and problems of a bi-cultural people in the community, and to foster within the administration and community at large, the awareness of the basic needs of Chicanos at the University and in communities at large."

For the Chicano, the conference will attempt to assess the concerns of Chicanos with respect to specific topics of discussion, as well as evaluate and determine the response to the conference at large.

The workshops and seminars, to be held from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. Thursday, concentrate on those professions lacking Chicanos. The workshop topic, "Bi-Cultural Mass Media Communications," will be held in room 214, and will feature Andrew Aguilar, deputy director for the children's television workshop "Sesame Street," in New York City, as main speaker. Aguilar will focus on the methods for Chicano utilization of the options available through the media.

The workshop to be held in the Dads' Room, EMU, will be "Los Campesinos Hablan (Seasonal and Migrant Workers)." This group will address itself to the problems of seasonal and migrant workers.

"The Chicano Community and Revenue Sharing," room 215, will feature Reynaldo Maduro, executive director of the Cabinet Committee on Opportunities for Spanish Speaking People, and will focus on methods available to the Chicano for utilization of the resources available through revenue sharing funds in the community. Other speakers include Arnaldo Solis, M.D., who will lecture on the psychological, philosophical and spiritual practices of the American Indian.

Other activities include: films, social gatherings, the Ballet Del Sol, poetry readings, Chicano Breakfast, a Comida Mexicana and Chicano Dance.

Tickets for the activities on Saturday will be sold in a $5 packet for both students and non-students. Prices for individual activities are: Chicano Breakfast, $1.50; Comida Mexicana, $3 for adults, $1.50 for children; Chicano Dance, adults $1.50, children free.

Tickets are available in the President's Office, Johnson Hall; MEChA, EMU; or SESAMEX, 110 Fenton Hall.
