Easter Seal Fund drive underway

By GRAHAM KINGSBURY
Of the Emerald

Five-year-old Jeff Stout opened the 1974 Lane County Easter Seal campaign yesterday, by mailing the first appeal letter from Children's Hospital School in Eugene. Jeff, a victim of cerebral palsy and the 1974 Oregon Easter Seal Child, is a student at the Hospital School.

The first donors of this year's campaign, Steve Leonard and Diana Musson, representing Demolay and the Rainbow Girls, also made a $260 contribution during the ceremony.

ALSO PRESENT at the morning ceremonies were Lane County Commissioner Nancy Hayward, Lane County Campaign chairer Lloyd Stamp and Byron Krog, managing director of the Hospital School.

Stamp said 60,000 letters containing Easter Seals and appeals were mailed yesterday throughout Lane County. "We hope to raise at least $25,000 in Lane County this year," he added, "too help finance Easter Seal projects and services for crippled children and adults throughout the state."

He emphasized that over 2,900 Oregonians received aid from Easter Seals last year, an increase of 25 per cent over the previous year. "This was possible," he said, "through public support of annual Easter Seal sales and other fund raising projects."

COMMISSIONER HAYWARD, who once worked at the Hospital School, said, "nearly 3,000 people who received help last year provides an ample statement of the good which the Easter Seal organization does."

Here in Lane County, the Children's Hospital School serves over 150 physically handicapped children annually, Krog explained and the school provides physical, occupational and speech therapies—as well as general classroom instruction—for both pre-school and school age children. "In addition," he said, "the Hospital School also houses a Learning Disabilities Center for children with perceptual and special neurological problems."

Yet the Hospital is only one of many state Easter Seal projects. Some of the other projects and services, according to Stamp, include a special housing development for crippled persons in the Portland area, a speech and hearing center in Grants Pass and a summer camp for crippled children on the Oregon coast. He said Easter Seals also provides mobile therapy units and clinics which serve persons in outlying areas across the state.

Cannon appointed as DEQ director

SALEM (UPI) — Kessler Cannon was formally sworn in as director of the Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) Thursday by Gov. Tom McCall.

Cannon previously was assistant to the governor for natural resources.

McCall also named Harold (Hal) Brauner to succeed Cannon as natural resources assistant.

Brauner, 34, has been a budget supervisor in the executive department and previously served as Cannon's assistant.

Cannon was appointed to fill the DEQ post following the resignation of former DEQ director Diarmuid O'Scannlain, who resigned to seek the republican nomination for Congress.
