

Women's Forum sets lectures

Six University women will present lectures and direct workshops at a day-long conference focusing on the social issues facing women Saturday at Central Oregon Community College (COCC) in Bend.

Sponsored by the Women's Research Forum, a group of University faculty members, the "Women in Perspective" symposium will cover such topics as causes of sex segregation of jobs, wage differences between men and women, problems of being a woman artist or writer, and changing relations between men's and women's social roles.

The conference agenda will consist of four successive sessions, beginning at 9 a.m. and continuing until 4 p.m. Registration begins at 8:30 a.m. All sessions will be held at Ochoco Hall at COCC.

Registration is open to the public. Registration fees are $5 per person, including lunch, or $2 for registration only.

The symposium is funded by a grant from the Oregon Committee for Humanities, and coordinated by the University Division of Continuing Education.

Psychologist offers busing opinion

An internationally known social psychologist and expert on American race relations from Harvard University will offer his perspective of the controversy over school busing in a free public lecture Friday.

Thomas Pettigrew will speak at 3 p.m. in 145 Straub Hall. The address is entitled "The Continuing Need for Racial Integration."

Author and co-author of several books and dozens of articles and book reviews, Pettigrew's work has appeared in scholarly journals, popular magazines, Congressional and governmental reports and the Encyclopedia Britannica Yearbook.

Pettigrew contributed to the 1965-66 study by the Advisory Committee to the U.S. Office of Education on "Equal Educational Opportunity." The study, known as the "Coleman Report" cited a need for school busing.

However, since the Coleman Report was published, James Coleman, committee head, has concluded that the "cost" of busing is to drive whites into the suburbs. In a new series of papers, talks and Congressional testimony, Coleman supports his "white flight" theory with demographic data.

As the main critic of Coleman's research, Pettigrew uses his own data to deny that white flight has occurred in several major cities. He contends that without continuing pressure for equal opportunity, the movement toward racial integration — and thereby minority advancement — will stop.

Jointly sponsoring Pettigrew's appearance are the sociology and psychology departments, the College of Education and the School of Community Service and Public Affairs.

Space experiments may be held

Scientific experiments that could be done aboard the first United States space shuttles are the subject of a recent University publication.

The publication is the report of a University conference last summer which brought together helium researchers from throughout the nation to consider whether experiments in helium could be done advantageously in space.

"We discovered several experiments of fundamental scientific importance that can only be done in a space environment," says University physicist Russell Donnelly.

Donnelly and Petter Kittel, also on the physics staff, had received a grant from NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory at California Institute of Technology to survey the class of helium experiments which could be done advantageously in space.

"We decided the best way to carry out the study was to hold a small conference here in Eugene," Donnelly says.

The results of the conference were a set of proposals for experiments in physics in the space shuttle environment.

Bike survey nears completion

Today marks the final day of a week-long bicycle survey that was conducted to determine the routes most used by students in commuting to campus.

Survey forms, which were placed in the spokes of bicycles, are to be turned in by today at Emerald distribution stands and the library checkout counters.

The survey asked students to trace on a map the route they use when riding to school, how often a student visits the campus during the day, and how often he rides his bike when coming to the University.

Survey results will be given to the University Transportation Committee and the City of Eugene, both of which are working on a proposal to make bike travel easier and safer in the campus area.

Survey forms are also available at the Survival Center in the EMU for those who did not receive a form in their spokes.

Library hosts raku workshop

Two programs featuring earthenware glazed by a Japanese process called "raku" will be held at the Eugene Public Library today and Saturday. Artist-in-residence Judith Teufel will present a slide and lecture program tonight at 7:30 and will demonstrate installation of a kiln and firing wares from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday.

Teufel's program is sponsored by the Statewide Art Services Oregon Artist Workshop Program.

She teaches at the School of Arts and Crafts in Portland and has displayed her works in a number of galleries including Portland's Contemporary Crafts Gallery.

Participants will have the opportunity to glaze and fire raku tiles. Craftspersons may bring their own small bisqued pot to be fired if they desire.

The program is free and open to the public.

Six graduates to get honors

Six graduating seniors from the University College of Health, Physical Education and Recreation will be presented honor awards at a special ceremony Monday.

The award winners are Scott Johnson, Baker, and Carolyn Edén, Lake Oswego, in health education; Diane Smith, Eugene, and Jonathan Ambrose, East Lansing, Mich., in physical education; Laurence Hecox, Saratoga, Calif., in dance; and Robert Rinehart, Pendleton, in recreation.

The awards are given for high academic accomplishment, professional interest and participation in extracurricular activities related to the major and in community activities, and high personal standards.

The awards will be presented at a 4 to 6 p.m. dessert Monday in the Gerlinger Hall alumni lounge.
