

can pay along with your violation of rules fee, and then after two terms there's the initiation fee. After the initiation — which is no big deal — you're a 'bro.'"

"But what is initiation exactly?"
"I can't tell you the whole thing," Julius said casually, "but the days of hazing are over, believe me. Initiation nowadays is more . . . well, academic. It's a test, made up of 100 questions. If you answer the questions correctly, everything's okay, and if you don't there's a . . . punishment."

"What sort of punishment?"
"Oh, it's nothing to worry about, almost everyone recovers."

"What about the questions?"
"Well . . . we might, for example, ask you if you think women are human beings."

"Huh? Well, sure, of course they are."

Julius shook his head sadly. "No, that would be a 'wrong' answer. Try again. Suppose we asked you 'Which is a more useful tool: a Jaguar XKE with wire wheels or a combine to harvest wheat for hungry children.'"

"It would be the combine, wouldn't it?"

Julius shook his head again. "No, that would be a 'wrong' answer too. Let's see . . . suppose we asked you if God loved the Ducks more than the Beav..."

"Hey, Julius," cut in the voice of another member. It was a deep, rumbling voice, like Julius', the sort of voice that changed at age nine, coming from a throat that had been shaved daily since junior high. "They're stacked up out here. Come out and get another one."

"Well," Julius said, taking my hand again in that veiled-threat grip. "Will we see you again?"

"I'll think about it," I promised, and he trotted away.

My emotions were jumbled. It had all been so strange — the weird rooms, the bizarre test, and that enigmatic closed door. I stood motionless, in a fog, until . . .

"Hey, how's it going, good to see you, pal. My name's Lance, business, member, Sacred Spleen, Roseburg. You been shown around?"

"Why, ye- Uh, no, as a matter of fact I haven't."

"Terrific!" Lance bubbled. "Get keyed, get psyched!" He led me down the hall to the closed door. "Now," he said, winking furiously, "you'll see what being in a fraternity is all about. We've got a few 'candid shots' of Greek life that should prove very educational."

He opened the door, giving vent to hoots and catcalls and that same mysterious whirring of machinery that I had heard before. Once inside I saw that the sound came from a projector splashing a color picture of an oddly familiar scene against a wall. It showed a room — a sorority room, with two lovers in it, locked in a torrid embrace. A soft-core porno flick, I chuckled softly to myself. It had elements of comedy too, I noticed, and I laughed softly to myself as the woman dropped her earring, while the man struggled with his big, clumsy boots, and tried to free himself from his ridiculous jacket with . . .

OUR HERITAGE IS BUILT ON QUALITY WITH THE ASSURANCE OF QUALITY.

Let's speak frankly . . . there are a lot of places you can purchase a stereo, ranging from "discount" warehouses to the corner drugstore. And it seems we're all offering "The Best Price" with "The Best Benefits" on "The Best Stereo In Town."

So, what makes Toad Hall different? Simply, in one word: Time. Time spent on careful selection of the products we offer; Not for profit alone, but for the clearest, most natural sound.

Time spent helping you make an informed, logical choice . . . of the stereo best suited to our needs. Time spent in simple, straightforward explanation of how to achieve maximum performance from your stereo. And time spent correcting any problems you might have in the years you own your stereo.

In Fact, we spent over 10 years devoting time to our customers, helping them enjoy music. That's what we're here for, and we feel that's time well-spent.
