

Asks Boyd to refuse increase

Pay hikes anger Bernau

By TOM ROSSI

Former ASUO Pres. Jim Bernau has requested University Pres. William Boyd to voluntarily forego the 10 per cent salary increase approved for him and other high-level administrators on May 25 by the State Board of Higher Education.

Bernau, who contacted Boyd in a June 1 letter while still president, said the money from salary increases for Boyd and other high-level administrators could instead be used to fund several "badly needed" new faculty positions in state institutions.

Bernau sent similar requests to R.E. Lieuallen, chancellor of the State Board of Higher Education, University Vice-Pres. Gerald Bogen, and other members of the board and University administration.

Also, Bernau sent letters to student body presidents throughout the state urging them to take similar action at their schools.

Bernau singles out high-level administrators because he claims they are already overpaid. He says he "doesn't buy the rightness in parity" argument made by Lieuallen and others who claim that administrators in Oregon already are among the lowest-paid in the state.

Bernau estimates seven extra faculty could be hired in the state from the money allotted for salary increases to high-level administrators. He cites the situation at the University's business school as proof of the need for additional faculty.

Bernau says he is "tired of hearing hypocritical administrators say that students must bear the bite of inflation."

Instead, Bernau is "looking for some leadership in the tough times ahead" in the form of voluntary rejection of salary increases.

Lieuallen disagrees. In a recent reply letter to Bernau, he claimed serious morale problems would eventually result in the selected administrators whose salaries were frozen.

More importantly, Lieuallen said, serious problems would result in the recruiting of new administrators. He added that "in the real world, a major incentive continues to be real income."

Lieuallen explained that salaries are set biennially on the basis of estimates of the economy and salary levels in other states. But, unlike the Legislature, the State Board can review and alter salaries at any time during the biennium.

However, he added legal proceedings by those affected by such action was possible.

Lieuallen cited four studies comparing salaries of university presidents which indicated that presidential salaries in Oregon are below average.

A University of Colorado study of American Association of Universities institutions showed that the University of Oregon paid the lowest salary of the sixteen respondents.

"It will be exceedingly difficult to attract outstanding men and women to position of leadership in our system unless we pay competitive salaries," Lieuallen said.

Howard seeks post

Over 400 supporters attended an assembly of electors in the Eugene Hotel Wednesday night and nominated Lowell educator Jim Howard by ballot as an independent candidate for the Fourth Congressional District.

Howard's campaign workers will now take the signed ballots to

Secretary of State Clay Meyers' office in Salem to verify that at least 250 of the signers are registered Oregon voters. If the list gets the okay, Howard will be placed on the November Ballot facing incumbent Rep. Jim Weaver, D-Eugene, and Republican challenger Jerry Lausmann of Medford.

No enrollment limit forecast

Fall term enrollment limitations will not be initiated at this University despite early cutoffs of new student applications at Oregon State University.

This year the deadline for new freshmen is July 1. A similar enrollment freeze took effect Aug. 29 last year on the Corvallis campus.

The cutoff date was moved up because enrollment at OSU is running 13 per cent ahead of last year, according to Wallace Gibbs, OSU registrar and director of admissions.

Enrollment ceilings of 15,000 full time equivalent (FTE) students are imposed on both universities by the State Board of Higher Education and the State Legislature, who funds them.

One student taking 15 credit hours or 15 students taking one credit hour qualify as an FTE.

State funds totaling $1,500 are provided for each Oregon resident student up to the ceiling figure. Registrations above that mark do not receive state support.

Fall term enrollment at OSU exceeded state funding by 934 students last year while University enrollment was 17,384, keeping under the allocated 15,000 FTE figure.

OSU Dean of Administrations Milosh Popovich feels that an enrollment of 16,000 is still likely for the fall regardless of the early cutoff of new student applications.

"A lot of returning students are in the pipeline because our freshmen classes are always large," he stated.

University registrar Spencer Carlson expects all term enrollment for Oregon to be around 17,500, qualifying for an FTE of 15,500.

Popovich says OSU "got by in 1975-76 with the overload by taking some temporary measures."

"We anticipate we would just make our enrollment," said Carlson.

The measures included overfilling classes and greater use of part-time staff and graduate teaching assistants.

He further stated, "Reduced funding interferes with the objective of providing the best possible education."

University Pres. William Boyd said the cut-offs at OSU could possibly effect enrollment at the Eugene campus because the schools have some of the same general programs.

Boyd does not expect a freeze on this campus. He says University students no longer feel economic or social pressures to complete their undergraduate work in four years.

By limiting enrollment at universities with ceilings and higher admission requirements, state board officials say they hope to influence students to consider state colleges with fewer enrollment strains.
