

Polish history talk today

Prof. Paul Knoll of the University of Southern California, Los Angeles, will give a lecture on "The University of Cracow as a Late Medieval Studium," today at 3:30 p.m., room to be posted.

Knoll is a foremost authority in the field of medieval studies and one of the best American specialists in the history of medieval Poland. In addition to numerous articles on Polish and East European history he is the author of a major book, "The Rise of the Polish Monarchy. Piast Poland in East Central Europe, 1320-1370." His present lecture is connected with his recent work on cultural history of Polish and Bohemian lands in the Middle Ages. The American Philosophical Society recently published his study "Learning in Late Piast Poland."

Indian women to hold potluck

The American Indian Women's Club will hold a fund-raising potluck and bake sale 6 p.m. Friday at the Longhouse, 1606 Columbia St. While admission to the potluck itself is free, donations are sought for the bake sale.

The recently formed club will announce new officers at the potluck and will explain the organization's goals. Help is also requested in setting up the potluck.

Awards to aid study in France

The French government has announced the availability of scholarships for doctoral students to study in France during the 1977-78 academic year. Because of the Oregon Study Center in France, usually at least one applicant from the state receives a scholarship.

Candidates must hold a master's degree and have registered for a Ph.D. program by the time of the award, and must have good working knowledge of French. Priority will be given to potential French teachers.

Scholarships are from mid-October to mid-June and offer a monthly allowance of 1,000 Francs (about $200). Deadline for applications is Dec. 15. Forms are available at the romance languages department, 101 Friendly.

Career guidance given by Academic Advising

If you have ever wondered what you'll do with your college degree... you're not alone.

"It's taken us a year to find out what we're offering and why we're offering it," says Dan Gaither of the Academic Advising Office.

The office helps University students decide on a major or just find out what kind of job possibilities are available to them with degrees in classics, philosophy and a variety of other fields.

Academic Advising, is now campaigning to get students who don't know what jobs they can get with their degrees, to come in and find out.

The office recently asked professors and departments to supply information regarding job opportunities in different areas so the staff can work more efficiently with those students who have undeclared majors and who are somewhat discouraged by the job market.

Gaither admits that students who are not in a professional school may have a rough time getting the practical experience many times needed to get that first job. "The word professional lends itself to a more immediate consideration," he says.

He says academic advising is trying to help students decide which route to take — the professional or the academic — and firmly believes "graduating from college with experience can be done."

Cliff Lewis, who also works in the office, says "jobs are limited, therefore students need more practical experience."

Gaither and Lewis believe that practicums definitely help the student gain experience for job openings, and there are many practicums students don't even realize exist. Gaither says academic advising is willing to inform students of them.

The campaign is "pulling together a lot of different things on campus," according to Gaither, and hopefully, responses from instructors and information from departments will increase the staff's ability to give the student a fair perspective of his job field.

Often students are disappointed because their degree limits them in the job field, and Gaither says "students ask why the University didn't tell them."

Academic Advising is trying to curb that problem. He concludes: "We're cleaning house, trying to direct students to experience."
