

Nixon: Henry we've done it, never look back

WASHINGTON (AP) — Richard Nixon says he rejected as "sheer madness" a Soviet proposal that he send two American divisions into Israel during the 1973 war to help impose a cease-fire while Russian troops were moved into Egypt and Syria.

The former president, ranging over 5½ years of foreign policy in an interview broadcast Thursday night, said joint superpower intervention might have kept the Mideast peace but it would have raised "the possibility of a big-power conflict."

In the interview with David Frost, second in a five-part series of remembrances, Nixon credited his administration with preserving Egyptian Pres. Sadat from "a coup or worse" by negotiating the release of the Israeli encircled Egyptian army.

Recalling the implicit pressures he brought to bear on the Israeli government, Nixon said that like the storied Mafia "Godfather," he "gave them an offer that they could not refuse" — a promise of unflagging U.S. support whenever Israel came under attack.

The interview with Nixon was shown over a makeshift network of 155 stations. Frost is paying Nixon $600,000 for the interviews, plus a percentage of the gross.

Without having to deal with the tensions of Watergate, which forced him to resign in 1974, Nixon sketched with considerable detail his impressions of Henry Kissinger, his principal foreign policy adviser, Chairman Mao Tse-tung of China and Soviet leaders Nikita Khrushchev and Leonid Brezhnev.

Nixon said Kissinger "couldn't stand the bureaucratic infighting" and that Kissinger feuded with William Rogers, who he finally succeeded as secretary of state in 1973.

Nixon said Kissinger had suggested "maybe a half-dozen times" that perhaps he — Kissinger — ought to quit.

Kissinger advised Nixon it might be politically dangerous to send more than limited military support to Israel during the 1973 war but Nixon gave the order: "Send everything that flies."

Mao Tse-tung, despite complications of at least a partial stroke and having to converse almost entirely in monosyllables, "was in charge of himself and he was in charge of China" until his death in 1976.

A tough and ruthless leader, Mao lived simply and was aided by "rather pretty Chinese girls" who lifted him up and helped him walk.

Khrushchev, the late Soviet leader who steered his country away from the legacy of Josef Stalin, was both boorish and brilliant, with "a terrible inferiority complex."

By contrast, Brezhnev, his successor and current head of the Kremlin hierarchy, is not so quick but is "far better mannered" and "a much safer man to have sitting there with his finger on the nuclear bomb." Somewhat of a "fashion-plate," Nixon said Brezhnev likes beautiful cars and beautiful women.

The move to seek an accommodation with China after nearly a quarter-century of hostility was his own, Nixon said, and not Kissinger's.

"I conceived it before I ever met him and I pushed it very hard from the first days of the administration," the former president said.

Nixon said he could foresee neither a rapprochement between China and the Soviet Union nor a Chinese attack on Taiwan.

"The only major external threat that they face from the Soviet Union is so immediate," he said, "that the Chinese do not want to become involved in military action, even on an issue as sensitive as Taiwan."

On the U.S. invasion of Cambodia in 1970, Nixon said Kissinger initially had some reservations but once the decision was made fully supported it.

However, after the demonstrations in May at Kent State and other U.S. universities, Nixon said Kissinger came to him and said: "You know, I'm not sure that we should have gone into this Cambodia thing, and perhaps now has come the time that we should shorten the time and get out a little sooner."

Actually, Nixon said, Kissinger "wasn't seriously considering it" and he told his adviser:

"Henry, we've done it. Remember Lot's wife. Never look back."

Nixon told Frost: "I don't know whether Henry had read the Old Testament or not, but I had, and he got the point."

"Henry and I often had a little joke between us after that."

"Whenever he would come in and say, 'Well, I'm not sure we should have done this, or that, or the other thing,' I would say, 'Henry, remember Lot's wife.' And that would end the conversation."

According to the Bible, as Lot and his wife fled Gomorrah in advance of its destruction, she defied an admonition not to look back and was turned into a pillar of salt.

Frost bites Nixon tree

CINCINNATI — A tree planted in honor of former Pres. Richard Nixon has died of frostbite, according to the director of Cincinnati's city parks.

The 20-year-old tree, a bald cypress replanted after the 1968 election, has three frost cracks from the severe winter and was pronounced dead Thursday, parks director Fred Payne said.

The tree is part of the President's Grove, which was established at Eden Park in 1882.
