Irate lumbermen whack downtown

In a protest against wilderness, Oregon lumbermen chopped down Eugene Thursday.

Screaming "Kiss my Axe," the loggers began chopping on City Hall early Thursday morning. "Timber," they shouted as it crashed to the ground. When they ran out of buildings, the loggers began chopping down cars. These were also leveled. Having nothing better to do, the loggers then proceeded to chop down Archie Weinstein.

"We're having a lot of fun," said logger Douglas Fir. "If the weirdos take the wilderness away, we loggers will come to the city and play."

Portland escapes via nuclear clouds

The amount of damage caused by the May 1 radioactive gas leak from Trojan Nuclear Power Plant was underestimated, Portland General Electric authority Adam Split reported Thursday.

"At first, we thought Portland was hiding somewhere in the Nuclear cloud, and were optimistic," said Split. "But now the cloud is gone and Portland still hasn't shown up. The Public Relations department isn't going to like it, but I'm going to go out on a limb and say that Portland has dissolved."

Split points out, however, that the damage was only half as much as allowed under federal safety standards.

Student spaces out on Moonie leaflets

Mark Z. Hughes broke another school record Wednesday collecting 14,000 Moonie pamphlets in the space of one hour. Asked his secret, Hughes replied, "I dunno, I was walking around campus a lot and people with varnished eyes kept holding out Moonie Pamphlets. I thought they had something to do with astronomy," he said.

Detectives narrow creature's identity

The furry, foul smelling creature sighted by tourists last Sunday in Vancouver, Canada, was not, according to investigators, the legendary Bigfoot.

"At first he had us fooled," admitted chief investigator Squash Sack. "But then we considered his actions. Bigfoot wouldn't jump up and down, juggle tourists and break a bus. We are convinced the hairy half-man half-ape was either Hunter S. Thompson or Idi Amin on a Northwest vacation," confided Sack.

Brigade members kidnap committee

Unbeknownst to the populus, the Pissed Off Student Brigade (POSB) kidnapped the House Joint Ways and Means Committee after the tuition hearing Tuesday night.

POSB members are at this moment masquerading as a subcommittee in Salem. "Whatever you do, don't put this in the paper," said POSB member Bob Z. McGregor, who preferred to remain anonymous. "It would blow the lid off our whole project."

Comedy premieres despite nose itch

"Over the Roar of the Greasepaint, I Heard the One Who Flew Over the Loon's Nest Call Me Jean Brodie On a Stretcher Named Desire," Franz Kafka's only humorous play, opened last night at Carouso Theater.

The play was presented in a way that not only stimulated the eye, ear, nose and throat, but that created a sinking feeling in the viewer's stomach as well.

John Power played the part of a 90-year-old man with the physique of a 20-year-old exquisitely. However, since we must find something to criticize, we will ask Power: was it necessary to scratch your nose at the end of the third act? Every actor must learn to practice some restraint and, after all, you were supposed to be dead.

Peter Welch seemed to live the role of the evil cuckoo, doing a magnificent job of strutting around, ruffling his feathers and laying an egg in the second act.
