

Teaching study honored

A University report comparing conventional versus team teaching approaches to elementary school instruction has won a first place award from the National School Public Relations Association.

The Center for Educational Policy and Management (CEPM) staff began studying team teaching in 1972 when the National Institute of Education approved funds to implement the project.

John Packard, CEPM research assistant, directed the project with aid from Susan Pakkock, CEPM graduate fellow, and Patricia Schmuck, CEPM assistant professor.

The researchers studied 38 schools in New Hampshire, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Virginia and Kentucky and found that team teaching seemed to stimulate greater participation in decision-making and produce more communication.

The report also found language arts and reading programs more easily convertible to team teaching. Similar attempts in math, science and social studies survived only 20 per cent of the time.

Livestock deadline nears

The deadline for entering livestock in the Lane County Fair is one week away.

All entries in the horse, dairy cattle, beef cattle, sheep and goat, dairy goat, swine, poultry and rabbit departments must be returned to the fair office or to the department superintendent by 5 p.m., Monday, August 1.

Entry forms and premium books are available at the fair office, 796 W. 13th Ave. Names and addresses of superintendents are listed in the premium books.

Horses and rabbits must be brought to the fair by Sunday, August 14. Judging will begin the next day. All other livestock must be at the Fairgrounds by Monday, August 15. Judging in those departments will begin on Monday and will continue until Thursday, August 18.

For more information, call the fair office at 687-4292.

Outdoor films featured

A "multi-media" presentation of rock climbing in Yosemite National Park, mountaineering in Russia and hang-gliding will be featured at 7 p.m. Wednesday in Room 150 of the Geology Building on the University campus.

Sponsored by the University's Outdoor Program, the session will also include showing of the films "Joe Brown," a portrait of a British rock climber, and "Ascent," the story of a three-person climb on El Capitan mountain in Yosemite.

Town saddles Pioneer Days

Along with the heat of summer comes an incessant drive to return to the days of the proverbial "Old West."

In keeping with this drive, Eugene will hold its annual "Pioneer Days," July 27 to 30. The goal of the event, according to Carol Armstrong of the Eugene Downtown Association, is to "Turn back the clock to the days of 'High Noon' and shoot-em-up cowboys."

Armstrong advises those interested in participating in the festivities to "Ride to the nearest out-post and call Ray McIver, the mall manager, or Armstrong, his right hand cowgirl," at 484-1620.

Writer joins sports bureau

Ron Paradis, 22-year old native of Portland, has been appointed to the newly-created position of assistant director of the Athletic News Bureau at the University.

A 1977 graduate of the School of Journalism, Paradis will serve as chief assistant to the director of the Bureau.

As recipient of the Art Litchman Memorial Scholarship, named after the University's first Sports Information Director, Paradis served as student assistant in the Bureau last school year. His major assignment was the producing of the media guide and meet programs for track and field.

A 1973 graduate of West Linn High School, Ron formerly worked part-time for the Oregonian.

Rec program holds concerts

Two free concerts will be presented Wednesday and Thursday by young musicians in the Eugene Parks and Recreation Department's Summer Music Education Program.

Forty young people in the program's combined bands will play at 7 p.m. Wednesday at South Amazon Park, 36th Avenue and Hilyard Street, conducted by Philip Cansler.

Junior high and grade school age musicians in the program's Festival Orchestra will perform at 7 p.m. Thursday on the lawn outside Celeste Campbell Senior Center, 155 High St. The program will be conducted by Ron Itami.

The public is invited to attend the concerts which are the climax of six weeks of rehearsals and classes in the city-sponsored summer music program.

Proposed plan released

A draft of a proposed management plan for the Mt. Jefferson Wilderness area in the Cascade Mountains has been released for public review.

The 63,000-acre wilderness is a popular hiking and camping area located north of the Santiam Pass area northeast of Eugene.

The plan was prepared by the Willamette National Forest in coordination with the Mt. Hood and Deschutes National Forests. The wilderness area overlaps the three forests.

The objective of the plan is to establish management direction of the wilderness for the next 10 years. The various resources and activities in the Wilderness are discussed and management policies are proposed.

Wilderness users may review the plan in the offices of the three National Forests.

Comments about the proposed plan should be mailed to the Willamette National Forest supervisor, P.O. Box 10607, Eugene, Oregon 97401, no later than Aug. 3.

Swim code revised

Following the recommendation of the State Child Care Coordinating Council (4-C) Executive Committee which requested repeal of their temporary rule establishing swimming standards for Oregon day care centers, the Children's Services Division filed a repeal of the swimming code, effective last week.

The swimming standards, which went into effect July 1, caused concern by day care workers who claimed they were unrealistic and would cause many of them to discontinue their swimming programs.

"The Children's Services Division felt that the providers had made a legitimate case for repealing the temporary rule and holding a public hearing on permanent swimming regulations in August," says CSD Administrator, J.N. "Nick" Peet.

"We were pleased to learn that the 4-C Council agreed with our recommendation, and we will be making plans to conduct full public hearings on the controversial swimming standards in early August," continued Peet.

"CSD remains committed to establishing uniform swimming codes for all Oregon day care centers as soon as possible, but these standards need to be developed with input from the day care community."

Brooks studies state crime

Governor Bob Straub has appointed Eugene Police Chief Pierce Brooks to a newly formed Commission on Organized Crime.

The commission, created by executive order in March, was formed to help collect, store and disseminate information relating to organized crime in the state. Brooks and Jackson County Sheriff Duane Franklin were appointed by Straub Friday.

Reporting to the governor at least twice a year, the commission will help coordinate efforts of local, state and federal law enforcement agencies and will help conduct studies of organized crime in Oregon, while investigating allegations of corruption by public officials and out-of-state investments by organized crime in Oregon businesses.

Other members of the commission include state Attorney General Jim Redden, the Portland chief of police, the Multnomah County district attorney, the director of the Multnomah County Division of Public Safety and the administrator of the Oregon Liquor Control Commission.
