Census costs rise to $4 per person

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Census Bureau, which spent about $1 per American in compiling the 1970 census, says it will spend more than four times that amount to do the job in 1980.

Inflation and a larger population can be blamed for part of the increased costs, bureau director Manuel Plotkin says. But the critical reason is that the bureau is making a special effort to reach groups such as the poor and minorities which have been undercounted in the past.

Plotkin said it is difficult to convey to poor, uneducated people the importance of responding to the census, which for the first time will include questions about income and ethnic origin.

But he added that "the census has an impact on every American. It determines the seats in the House of Representatives."

He also noted census information is used to determine how much federal money goes to local communities.

And although the census form takes time to complete, "there is no question that will do people any harm. It's completely confidential, and none of the information can go to any other government agency," Plotkin said in an interview.

The 1970 census, which measured a population of 204 million, cost $218 million, census officials said. The 1980 census is expected to measure about 220 million Americans and cost about $900 million.

Plotkin said the 1970 census undercounted the number of Americans by two and a half percent; or 5.3 million persons. Of these, an estimated 3.4 million whites and 1.9 million blacks were not counted.

He said 200 field workers — 10 times the number in 1970 — will be hired in 1980 to help minority groups complete the census forms in an effort to remedy this problem.

Under law, there is a fine of up to $100 for willfully neglecting to respond to the census questionnaire.

Plotkin said that around April 1, 1980, every American household will receive by mail a census form with such questions as sex, race, marital status, number of children, educational background, occupation, quality of housing, plumbing facilities and appliances owned.

About 80 percent of the population will receive the short form, which has 19 questions and takes approximately 15 minutes to complete. The other 20 percent will receive the long form, which has about 75 questions and takes about 45 minutes to complete.
