

Handicapped rights focus of workshop

By JOHN LUDWIG
Of the Emerald

Part of the 1973 Rehabilitation Act is essentially a "Bill of Rights," for the handicapped, Marion Solomon of the Seattle HEW Regional Office for Civil Rights said Saturday at a "How-to Workshop" for handicapped citizens of Eugene-Springfield.

The workshop, sponsored by the Eugene Commission on the Rights of the Handicapped, was part of the commission's continuing effort to provide educational workshops, to identify the percentage of handicapped persons in the population and to channel discrimination suits for the handicapped to the three human rights specialists working for the city manager, explained Carol Johansen, the workshop coordinator.

Solomon told the workshop audience what Section 504 of the 1973 Rehabilitation Act means, both to the handicapped and to the institutions receiving HEW funds. "Any program receiving financial assistance from HEW, including elementary and secondary schools, colleges, hospitals and social service agencies, must comply with Section 504 to continue receiving money."

One of the "key issues" is

"program accessibility," she said. Under this regulation, all buildings must be architecturally accessible to the handicapped. Not all buildings must have elevators, but classes normally offered on the second floor should meet also on the first floor.

"In order to gain program accessibility," said Solomon, "a total program change is necessary in regards to toilet facilities, drinking facilities, pay phones and parking lots." Each program must now comply with Section 504 building regulations or have on its files a "transition program" that states the problem, solution, course of action and time-frame in which the problem will be corrected. This file, which was to be completed by Dec. 2, last year, will be maintained for the next three years, at which time compliance will be mandatory, she explained.

"University libraries," Solomon said, "are required by section 504 to provide aids who are available to assist the handicapped with recorders and Braille literature. Special assistants in certain academic areas will also be required, such as writing assistants, chemistry lab aids, aids at the reception areas of some buildings and interpreters for the deaf."

"Employment discrimination is another facet of 504," Solomon added. "Employers may not refuse to hire or promote handicapped persons solely because of their disability. Also, employers will be required to make 'reasonable accommodation' for handicapped employees."

In order to meet "reasonable accommodation" requirements, she said, employers may be faced with some expenses. The HEW will look at the budgets of employers to determine how much can be put into "reconstructing" job situations to meet the needs of the handicapped. "In some cases 'reconstruction' may mean nothing more than lowering a desk for an employee confined to a wheelchair," Solomon explained.
