

Edible Containers

Containers made of cabbage, whole wheat gingerbread, pretzels and carrots cemented with cream cheese were among those on display at the opening of the Northside Gallery's first show Tuesday afternoon.

Most of the exhibits in the "Edible Containers" one-day show were sold Tuesday and presumably eaten later. The containers were designed by students in Art 407G for a workshop on containers and concepts of containers.

The Northside Gallery is the project of another art workshop coordinated by students Maude May, Nancy Reagan Algrim and Jessica Hogland.

Its space is open to persons in the University community who want to show their wares.

The coordinators are at the gallery, located across Franklin Boulevard in the weaving studio, from 9 to 11 a.m.
