Inflation seminar set

A new Honors College colloquium next term will give students a chance to see professors "in a different light than the classroom, and articulating their views in a different environment," said Steven Raymund, a coordinator of a new Honor's College Colloquium, Symposium on Inflation and Unemployment, being offered next term.

The three-credit symposium will meet every Wednesday from 7:30 to 9:30 and consists of one speaker giving their view with commentators and students, often with differing perspectives, asking questions and debating issues raised during the talk.

Commentators will range from professors and union representatives, to corporate business men, Raymund said.

The "very informal" symposium will give more time to the problem of unemployment throughout the term because it is "easier to handle" than inflation, Raymund said.

Daniel Pope, an economic historian, will outline the history of various theories relating to unemployment and inflation during the first class. Robert Campbell, a University economics professor, will speak on governmental management of the economy through controlling the market during the second class meeting.

Other speakers during the term include Marty Landsberg, an assistant professor of economics at Willamette University, who will speak on a Marxist perspective of the 1970's; Margaret Simeral, University economics professor, speaking on unemployment; and Joan Acker, University professor of sociology, talking on women and unemployment in the 1970's.

Jerry Blake, an urban studies professor at Portland State University, will speak on unemployment among black youth in Portland. Blake has been examining and researching this for some time. Ed Whitelaw, University economics professor will be the commentator during that session.

The class is open to all students.

'Buzz Off Show' to host talent

"The Buzz Off Show," ala the Gong Show, will be held at The Place March 20 to establish a showcase for talent in areas of dancers, bands, mimes and acoustic acts.

All performers will receive a free pass to future events.

Participants should meet at The Place Thursday night at 6 to audition. For more information, call 726-5156.

Frohnmayr to give address

The annual dinner meeting of Catholic Charities of Lane County will be held Thursday at 6:30 p.m. at North's Chuck Wagon, 2864 Willamette St.

Speaking will be Rep. Dave Frohnmayr on "Search for Roots — the Open Adoption Record."

Tickets are priced at $3.30. Call 345-3642 for reservations.

Gallery invites student works

Northside Gallery invites students and staff to enter their works in "Dreamscapes," to be shown April 17-28.

Works in all media and mixed media are acceptable, and each artist may submit entries of not more than 20 inches in height, width or depth.

Selection will be made by three jurors. A donation of $2 is requested from accepted artists.

For more information, visit the gallery, or call 345-8149.
