A lot of things changed at KLCC after the so-called "Friday Night Massacre." But one thing remained the same — controversy. And when station manager Jim Dunne canceled the February 23 broadcast of the Eugene News Collective's program, it looked like things might explode again.

The central question remains — who will control KLCC? Should KLCC be a community station or an educational tool? Finally, can a compromise be reached between the LCC administration and the station's staff? Dan Webster examines the issues in an in-depth report beginning on Page 4.
