

Computers on display

A wide range of computer terminals, peripherals and minicomputers will be shown at a computer Terminal Faire Wednesday.

The Faire, sponsored by the University Computing Center, will be held from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. in Room 167 EMU. Oregon, Washington and California vendors of computing equipment will conduct demonstrations throughout the day. The Faire will be open to the public, and admission is free.

Aikido defense lecture planned

Aikido will be demonstrated in the EMU, room to be posted, Wednesday at 7 p.m.

Aikido is a system of non-violent self defense based on the use of "Ki, the great power that is naturally ours." A lecture on the techniques will accompany the demonstration, as sponsored by the University YMCA and the Oregon Ki Society.

Input solicited on symposium

Anyone wishing to praise, criticize or just comment on last week's Women's Symposium, are invited to a meeting at Gertrude's Cafe, 1121 Lincoln St., tonight at 7.

Donna Shephard, this year's symposium coordinator, is requesting student "input on what they like and didn't like about the symposium."

Planning processes for next year's Women's Symposium begin immediately, and any persons interested in becoming involved should attend the meeting. Shephard stresses that persons who had expressed disagreement over the handling of this year's symposium are especially urged to attend.

Labor sessions to begin

The Oregon Bureau of Labor has scheduled another set of seminars for Wednesday April 26.

The first session on Wage and Hour will cover state and federal minimum wage and overtime regulations, time and payroll recordkeeping, employment of minors, wage agreements and employer policies.

The April 26 session will be on Civil Rights law.

Both sessions will be held in the Forum, Room 301, at Lane Community College, from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

To register, call the toll-free number, 1-800-452-3503.

Nutrition is alcohol topic

Nutrition and alcohol, with dietician Eleanor Latterell as leader, will be discussed at the next Community Alcohol Education Program, tonight at 7:30 at the Central Presbyterian Church.

Latterell says drinking alcoholic beverages has a wide range of effects on the way bodies use food. It may deplete the supply of certain vitamins and minerals, she says, and might cause one to consume too many calories and become overweight.

Editors to visit campus

Two Oregon newspapermen and a Milwaukee, Wis., editorial writer have been selected to participate in the University's third annual Ruhl symposium in journalism.

J.W. Forrester Jr., editor and publisher of the Daily Astorian will serve as a Ruhl fellow April 24-27.

Richard Nafsinger, editor and publisher of the Hood River News is visiting the campus this week.

David Behrendt, editorial writer for the Milwaukee Journal, will deliver the Ruhl lecture May 15. He is a visiting professor of journalism this term.

Forrester and Nafsinger will spend their weeks on campus speaking to journalism classes and meeting informally with students and faculty members.

The symposium is financed by a grant to the journalism school by Maybel Ruhl, widow of Robert Ruhl, the former long-time editor of the Medford Mail-Tribune.

Asian group offers grants

The Asian Studies Committee is offering two scholarships covering tuition and fees, plus $2,925 for living expenses for foreign language majors.

Application forms are available at the Asian Studies Office, 308 Friendly Hall, and must be returned by noon Friday.

The College of Education criteria are academic achievement and conformity with priority fields: anthropology, economics, geography, humanities and sociology.

Applicants must be U.S. citizens and non-native speakers of the language in which they are majoring. Students must have finished at least one year of language study.

Business forum for women set

A Small Business Women's seminar is slated for May 1 and 2 in Portland, and advance registration is required.

The seminar is designed for women who own or manage their own small businesses and who want to sharpen practical management skills.

There is no charge for the sessions. For information and registration, contact the Portland office by calling 221-3441.
