Martin hauls in the most donations

SALEM (AP) — Former Gov. Tom McCall has garnered the most campaign money from out-of-state, while Gov. Bob Straub is the easy leader in collecting cash from lumber interests.

Those are among the disclosures on campaign finance reports filed by the top-spending candidates for governor in Oregon's May 23 primary election.

Straub, a Democrat seeking a second term against six challengers in the primary, and the three Republicans with the most money have raised a total of more than $400,000.

Seven Republicans are seeking the nomination for governor.

Of those, state Rep. Roger Martin of Lake Oswego has the biggest war chest. He had collected $164,000 as of April 23, according to reports filed with the state Elections Division. Next was state Sen. Victor Atiyeh of Beaverton with $91,000.

McCall, a late entry in the race who is more widely known than his challengers because of his two terms as governor, reported donations of $47,000. Straub's main re-election committee reported donations of $119,000.

In addition, a committee formed last fall primarily to support his candidacy listed additional contributions of $27,000 that did not flow to the main committee.

McCall, who gained a national reputation on environmental issues while he was governor, has collected $8,700 in donations from out-of-state sources.

That includes $3,500 from Laurence Rockefeller of New York City and $3,000 from New York investment counselor Dan Lufkin.

Straub reported donations of $3,600 from out-of-state. Atiyeh received $2,650 in out-of-state funds and Martin listed none.

Straub, who has been campaigning heavily for improved timber management, has attracted more than $11,000 from timber interests.

Martin has raised about $3,800 in major donations from lumber interests, while Atiyeh has received $3,700 from that source.

McCall reported no major donations from the timber industry.

McCall received $2,000 from the Oregon Joint Council of Teamsters. Atiyeh and Martin listed no major contributions from labor organizations.

Straub has received about $3,700 in donations from labor sources. The largest was $2,500 from the Amalgamated Transit Union, Portland.
