

EMU Board votes down proposed by-law change

After 45 minutes discussion Thursday, the EMU Board vetoed an amendment to its by-laws that would allow a representative from ASUO programs.

As the by-laws now read, there are three appointed members from EMU programs. EMU programs include the Cultural Forum, the Craft Center and several others.

The amendment would have changed the laws to read that one position would remain EMU program-represented, while the other two could be chosen from either EMU or ASUO programs.

Dusty Rhodes, EMU Board chairer, had hoped the amendment would pass to "bring constituencies currently unrepresented" to the board. He said since ASUO program members are "intensive users" of the building, they should be represented.

However, representatives from EMU programs voted down the measure, saying it "would be a mistake to water down" their influence.

In other business, the board unanimously approved a reallocation of office space for several ASUO programs. The transfer of office space is the result of the two-months work by a board subcommittee and the programs involved.

OSPIRG will move from Suite 3 to Suite 1, while Gerontology will move from Suite 3 to Suite 1.

Some new programs and some located off campus will now have space in the EMU. University Veterans will locate in Suite 3, People and the Oregon Coast and Women in Transition will be in Suite 1 and Action Now and Switchboard will be in Suite 5. These office changes will occur sometime next week, said Rhodes.
