

Club sports offer diversity

For those interested in athletics (beside the major inter-collegiate sports the University fields teams in) the club sports program offers 19 alternative activities that are open to all University students.

Sandy Vaughn will again coordinate the program from the club sports office located in the Recreation Center in the basement of the EMU.

The club sports program has grown more popular in recent years, and has many fine accomplishments to its credit. Last year the women's ski team was tops in the Pacific Northwest and some members of the fencing team advanced to regional competition in Oakland, California.

Besides fencing and skiing, the other sports offered are water polo, cycling, table tennis, handball, lacrosse, bowling, badminton, volleyball, soccer, sailing, equestrian, racquetball, rodeo, karate, crew, rugby and weight-lifting.

There is no fee to join a club sports team, but uniforms, equipment and other expenses are often associated with most sports.

Individuals should act fast if they wish to join a team because some sports like skiing will begin practicing in the fall.

If none of the 19 sports offered are of interest, it is possible to start up a new sport. To start a new sport it must meet these requirements. It must be a competitive sport with a coach, a facility to play and practice and must have 15 interested students to participate.

The club sports teams compete against other universities and colleges or sometimes in city leagues, however most competition is intercollegiate.

So if you want to compete but don't want the pressure of big time college athletics, relax and visit the club sports office. There is something for everyone.
