

The sky is falling, the sky is falling

Although Chicken Little would have gone running to warn all his friends of eminent danger and a Californian would have feared an earthquake, University students remained undaunted when the plaster broke loose from the ceiling and fell in the newspaper reading room of the main library around 11:00 a.m. Monday. The ceiling appeared to be wet. Most likely the water made the plaster heavy enough to fall from the ceiling. Californians have only wet ceilings to be wary of.

Lawyer set for meeting

A Washington attorney who has been a leader in establishing student press rights and responsibilities will be a featured speaker during the 52nd annual Oregon High School Press Conference at the University Friday, Oct. 6.

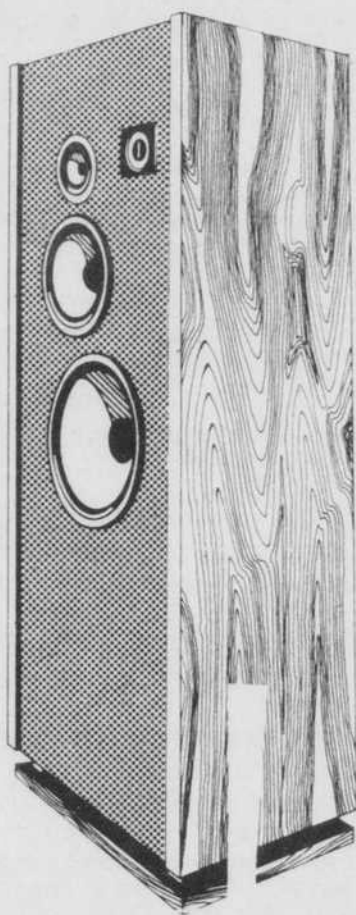

Christopher Fager, former director of the Student Press Law Center, will host a question and answer session for student journalists and advisers during the conference and conduct three workshops on student press rights.

Others featured on the program include Pulitzer Prize winning photographer Brian Lanker of the Eugene Register-Guard and University journalism Prof. Roy Halverson.

The conference, sponsored by the Oregon Scholastic Press, will include more than 40 workshops on yearbook and newspaper production and is expected to draw student journalists from around the state.
