Toga!

Local 'animals' invited to revel with beer, prizes & Sapphire

Answer: A toga party and the White House.

Question: Name two places you can look like a philosopher and act like an idiot.

You can also drink beer at both places — only the quantities have been changed to protect the innocent.

Other similarities may become apparent tomorrow night at a toga party sponsored by Universal Studios, the makers of Animal House, along with National Lampoon and The Pad of Eugene.

Dangerous levels of debauchery are promised at the event which will occur Friday at the Lane County Fairgrounds Agriculture Building at 8 p.m.

A minimum purchase of $5 in beer coupons and a toga are required for admission (wreath optional). All impersonators of ancient Romans must be 21 to enter.

The local event is one of 30 toga parties Universal is inciting on campuses around the country. According to an article in the Oct. 2 issue of Newsweek, the cry of "To-ga! To-ga! To-ga!" is echoing down marble halls and shaking ivy-covered walls on more than 100 campuses where toga parties are in the works.

Prizes totaling $1,500 will be given away at the party. Baseball shirts, posters, records and even James Widdoes (left) and Tim Matheson are more or less correctly garbed for the "toga" party held by the Animal House fraternity in a scene from the now infamous "National Lampoon's Animal House." You, too, can "toga down" Friday night at the Lane County Fairgrounds, provided you are 21 and properly toga-ed.

a trip to Las Vegas are possible rewards to stout-hearted individuals who are willing to risk attending the event. A hangover is included free of charge. Sapphire, a women's rock band, will provide live music.

And if that's not enough to keep you busy, you can try a new game for individuals with a short attention span: strip poker in a one-piece toga.
