

hear and now

Arts and Entertainment

Thursday, October 19, 1978

Dining at their house

To some persons, these old buildings are nothing more than fine places to eat. To others they are examples of interesting architecture or social or economic trends. But to anyone old enough to remember the stages these buildings have gone through, they are more than restaurants or examples of good carpentry. These structures represent slices of history worth preserving for future generations.

There are many such buildings in the area. A few are restaurants; some are residences; others are vacant. But they all have a story to tell. Please turn to Page 4B.

