University target for sex survey

University students apparently have become targets in a phony telephone survey being conducted in the Eugene-Springfield area.

The University Department of Psychology has received complaints over the past few months from citizens contacted by a person who claims to be conducting a sex-related telephone survey through the department. However, the psychology department is conducting no such survey, according to Robert Fagot, department head.

Fagot said since fall term began several complaints have been registered by students, and he speculated that the person making the telephone calls may be using a University student directory, "concentrating on the student population."
