Maybe the wind's blowing from the south, they changed the water or put something in the soup, but there are transformations happening in Pine Valley. All the changes surround the Tara-Phil-Chuck triangle, the longest crisis on the show; roles are being traded.

Pity poor Chuck. When Phil returned from Nam (where he was missing and presumed dead), Chuck eventually stepped aside and allowed Phil and Tara, who were high school sweethearts, to marry.

Having lost his family, Chuck rebounded into the arms of an 18-year-old prostitute from nearby Center City, Donna Beck. Chuck now realizes his mistake, that he's always loved Tara and was using Donna to fill a void. Conveniently, Donna was recently hit by a train and has returned to Center City unable to remember the last three years.

Meanwhile, Phil and Tara have separated and Chuck's applying pressure. He's tired of being the fall guy and is thinking of his happiness first.

So the triangle heats up. This time, though, Phil's not being near as much a jerk and Chuck's changing from a nice guy into a guy who acts a bit like his grandmother Phoebe.

Remember Tara had accepted Phil's invitation to go to the carnival tonight and Charlie had called Chuck and asked him to escort them. It was a classic confrontation.

"Are you ready for a night on the town?" asked Chuck, beaming and looking rich. "I've been looking forward to it all day!"

Chuck's smile quickly disappeared when he looked beyond Tara and saw Phil standing in the living room (looking quite sharp in a nicely tailored three-piece suit).

A quick exit stage left and Phil, Tara and Charlie went to the school carnival, leaving Chuck frustrated and lonely.

The carnival turned out to be a talent show with Doctor Joe and Ruth as the stars. There's reason to talk about Joe and Ruth 'cause the triangle's endangering their relationship too.

The past couple years have been stormy ones for the Martins. Dr. Joe was really a bozo and his impossible demands drove Ruth into the arms of a dashing young surgeon at the hospital (who has since accidentally poisoned himself). One cause of their trouble is that Ruth is Phil's adopted mother and Joe, Tara's real father. Troubles between Phil and Tara have translated into problems for the Martins.

After the last confrontation, Joe and Ruth pledged to be honest with each other. Too bad Ruth, Joe's welching.

See, Joe knows that Chuck and Tara really love each other and want to be married. He can't bear to tell Ruth (such a gripping story) because she so hopes for a reconciliation between Phil and Tara. Ruth will find out Joe's been less than honest with her.

Pine Valleyans never learn.
